

Table of contents

Preface by prof.dr. P.H.A.M. Verhaegen	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Chapter 1      Introduction
Why this book?	1
Managing and learning in the 21 st century	1
Aims of this book and target audiences	4
Composition of this book	5
Bookmark	7
Chapter 2      The new economy
Introduction	9
The new economy and industrial revolution	10
Defining the new economy	11
The macroeconomic view: structural features of the new economy	13
Industrial and occupational change	14
Globalization	14
Dynamism and competition	15
The information technology revolution	16
The role and contribution of ICT: some evidence	17
Technology, information, and new economics	19
ICT and economics	21
Three opinions on the future of the new economy	22
Opinion 1: A 'real' new economy	22
Opinion 2: A technological revolution	24
Opinion 3: An internet bubble	24
Value creation in the new economy: the importance of intangibles as competitive resources	25
The knowledge-based economy	25
The experience economy	28
The attention economy	30
Final thoughts: towards a network view	31
Chapter 3      The network economy
Introduction	34
Informationalism: the new socio-economic paradigm	35
Network technology, network economics, and network dynamics	37

Network dynamics: richness and reach	40
Definitions of networks	42
Principles and key characteristics of network organization	43
Organizing for flexible value creation: the network enterprise	45
Types of network organizations	48
Final thoughts: the network economy and challenges for education and business schools	52
 Chapter 4
    The manager of the 21st century: Management knowledge, management skills, and the management curriculum
Introduction	55
The new production of knowledge	56
Rounding out the manager's job for the 21 st century	58
Traits of the 21 st century manager	59
Competencies and skills	60
Network competencies	61
Role contingency and network roles	63
The network broker	65
Levels of network management and network management capabilities	67
Management knowledge for the 21 st century and the business school curriculum	68
Transforming management knowledge: changing paradigms	71
Functional fields and subtopics	73
The management curriculum	74
Final thoughts	77
 Chapter 5
    The new learning
Introduction	79
Features and principles of the new learning environment	80
From teaching to learning: the consequences of a new educational paradigm	82
The new learning, management knowledge, and management learning	84
Pedagogical implications: 'active' forms of learning	87
Organizing for learning: networks and communities of practice	89
Network learning	90
Education and ICT: why schools should(n't) invest in educational technology	96
Limitations of ICT	98
Effectiveness of educational technology	99
The effectiveness of ICT-mediated instruction	100
ICT-enabled opportunities	102
The cost-effectiveness of ICT	103
Technology-enabled learning environments	104
Pedagogical models and applications of ICT	106
The objectivist perspective	108

The constructivist perspective	108
Pedagogical models and educational technology: ICT strategies	110
Management education and ICT	112
Virtual learning communities	114
Final thoughts	116
 Chapter 6      The institutional perspective: Business schools' markets, organization, and strategy
Introduction: new institutional realities	118
The institutional environment	119
The commercialization of higher education	120
The internationalization of higher education	120
Internationalization, accreditation, and brand value	121
A strategy of partnerships	123
Prospering through partnering: examples from networks in practice	126
Type 1 partnerships	126
Type 2 partnerships	127
PIM and CEMS	127
PRIME	128
Trium Emba	129
Universitas 21	130
London Business School and Columbia Business School	131
INSEAD and Wharton	131
GeM	132
Type 3 partnerships	133
Type 4 partnerships	135
UNext	136
Pensare	136
FT Knowledge, Thomson Learning, Docent	137
Perspectives on knowledge institutions: concepts of universities and business schools	138
The distributed university/business school	138
The university's core activities	139
The role of degree-granting bodies and faculty	141
The virtual university/business school	142
Bricks or clicks	143
Models of virtualization	144
The virtual distributed university	145
The synolic business school (the challenge of double integration)	149
The business school as a learning centre	149
The hybrid business school	152
The networked business school	154
Task and objectives	155
Organizational structure	156

Case study of the networked business school: IMD Lausanne	159
About IMD	159
Learning at IMD	161
IMD as a networked business school	161
Final thoughts	163
Chapter 7
Epilogue: the need for strategic academic leadership
Introduction	166
Strategic academic leadership	167
Managing imbalance: the art of network management	169
References	171
Index	183

<http://www.springer.com/978-0-7923-7595-1>

Management Education in the Network Economy
Its Context, Content, and Organization

van Baalen, P.J.; Moratis, L.T.

2001, XI, 188 p., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-0-7923-7595-1