

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The following argument was first defended as a doctoral dissertation in March 1999 in the Department of Law at the European University Institute Florence. The criticism, the comments and the support received during and after the defence have shaped this text to its contemporary form. The text is considerably shortened, but as well some new chapters have been included. Some work related to the correction of the various fallacies unfortunately embedded in the thesis and to sharpening of the argumentation.

I would like to thank the readers of the thesis, Aulis Aarnio, Massimo La Torre, John Bell, Marie-Jeanne Campana, and Günther Teubner, for their help in this project. Especially the support and the encouragement of Aulis Aarnio and Alexander Peczenik have been essential for this publication. Aulis Aarnio has shown his deep broad-mindedness during this process and I hopefully have learned something from it.

I also want to thank Susan Lamb again for her short introduction to public secrets of the English language. The comments of the (unfortunately) anonymous Kluwer referee have also been instructive and he (she?) has given me inspiration to review and make additions to the text. Furthermore, many additions are due to the discussions I have had with Kaj-Henrik Impola, Olavi Sulkunen, Jari Hellsten and Heikki Larmola in the Finnish Parliament library during the endless “breaks”. Three of us have already defended, so these breaks have not been obstacles for the work but obviously some kind of intellectual “gymnastics” necessary for scientific thought.

The Finnish Parliament provided me work place in the researchers’ hall and help in research. Especially I want to thank Eila Rantala. The University of Turku provided me valuable experience by having me as a substituting professor of International and European Law in the Faculty of Law during 1999-2000, and various discussions there were very inspiring. I hope I would have the possibility to return some day to this University rich in tradition.

I would like to acknowledge the scholarship provided me for the Doctoral research by the Finnish Academy. The Finnish Cultural Foundation (Heikki Haapaniemi fund) gave me financial support for finishing the thesis. However, the work after the defence has been possible only because of the scholarship I received from the Emil Aaltonen Foundation. I sincerely thank all persons involved.

My friend Antti Lähteinen has patiently and with high professional skill provided me assistance with all the matters relating to computers, programming. The publishing editor Sabine Wesseldijk and her assistants Anny Burer and Ireke Ravesloot have patiently helped me and directed this publishing process in a friendly ambience.

Because this has been so long project I want to thank also Ilkka Kangasniemi, Tero Lahdes, Harri Pennanen, Merja Pentikäinen, Risto Wallin for the great moments together. My family, including my brother Mika, my parents Paavo and Anna-Liisa, Eeva Gaebel, Jussi and Pirkko Kiikeri, Orvokki Vuori, Jaana, Roosa and Pietu, and Ulla Aaltonen supported me in my defence, which I remember with joy.

My wife Anu and sons Justus and Walle have, like during this fathers' day, created the good humor, atmosphere and everything else for all this. I find no adequate words to thank you, so I dedicate this book to you.
