

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Since this book has its roots in my thesis, I am greatly indebted to the supervisor of my thesis, professor Rudolf Bernet of the University of Louvain, Belgium, and to my dissertation advisors, professor Thomas Baumeister of the University of Nijmegen, the Netherlands, and professor Ullrich Melle of the University of Louvain.

I am most grateful to professor Bernet for his encouragement and support to turn my thesis into this book, and I thank him, as director of the Husserl Archives in Louvain, for his permission to quote from Husserl's unpublished manuscripts.

I like to thank professor John Brough for his permission to use his translation of volume XXIII of the Husserliana series and his advice on translating Husserlian terminology, and professor Anthony Steinbock for his permission to use his translation of volume XI of the same series. Both translations will be published in the Edmund Husserl Collected Works series. My thanks are also due to professor Dieter Lohmar for the opportunity he gave me to look at the latest version of the transcription of Husserl's C-manuscripts. An edition of these manuscripts is in preparation at the Husserl Archives in Cologne.

Finally, I am much obliged to Jo Köhler, who translated this text; to Rikkert Stuve for his suggestions about the use of the English language; and to Lanei Rodemeyer for checking the translation of quotations from Husserl's works that have not yet been translated into English.

Phenomenology of Time

Edmund Husserl's Analysis of Time-Consciousness

Kortooms, T.

2002, XX, 304 p., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-1-4020-0121-5