INTRODUCTION	11
1.1. Why the ontology of time?	11
1.2. The method	11
1.3. The aim	12
1.4. “Non-being and time”	14
1.5. Time as number and calculating soul	14
1.6. Ontology of human action	17
1.7. Distinctio et compositio essentiae et existentiae	18
1.8. The transition to the “synchronic” analysis	18
1.9. Searching for the lost subject	20
1.10. Care as primordial temporality	23
1.11. Differentia differens	23
1.12. God without being and thought without thinker	24
1.13. Acknowledgments	26
CHAPTER ONE
NON-BEING AND TIME
(The prehistory of the concept of time)
1. The circle and the sphere	27
2. Ontology and chronology	34
CHAPTER TWO
TIME AS NUMBER AND CALCULATING SOUL
(Aristotle’s theory of time. The prototype of the ontological difference)
1. Energeia and its internal form	42
1.1. The definition of movement	42
1.2. The concept of energeia	45
1.3. Sensations as energeiai	48
1.4. Internal form of energeia	50
1.5. Identity of energeia and form	51

2. Number as “articulation” of a finite set	53
2.1. Magnitude and number	53
2.2. Number as numbering and as numbered	54
2.3. The numbering soul	56
3. Being and entity	59
3.1. Aristotle on the manifold meanings of being	59
3.2. The being of the copula	62
4. The “now” as one and as a multiple	66
5. Time and the intellect of the soul	72
5.1. Movement and number as objects of the sensus communis	72
5.2. How the understanding of difference is possible	73
5.3. The “now” and the “point”	75
5.4. Two energeiai of thought	76

CHAPTER THREE

DISTINCTIO ET COMPOSITIO ESSENTIAE ET EXISTENTIAE AS INTERPRETED BY MARTIN HEIDEGGER

1. Medieval discussion of the ontological difference	78
1.1. Medieval ontology and The Basic Problems of Phenomenology	78
1.2. Essence, existence and ontological difference	79
1.3. Semantic distinctions	80
1.4. Essence, whatness, nature	82
1.5. Essence is different from being (existence)	83
1.6. The simple and the complex	85
1.7. Distinction as such	85
1.8. Suarez on the distinction and composition of essence and existence in the finite entity	86
1.8.1. Distinctio rationis...	86
1.8.2. ...cum fundamento in re	88
2. Existence as finite being	90
2.1. Phenomenological interpretation	90
2.1.1. Ontology as phenomenology	90
2.1.2. The ontology of creation	91
2.2. Being received and not received	94
2.2.1. Objection to a purely mental character of the ontological distinction	94
2.2.2. Suarez' answer to this objection	94
2.3. Received in something other and received from something other	95
2.4. Existence as the finite being (esse) of finite entities	96
2.5. Existentia and Existenz	97

CHAPTER FOUR

ONTOLOGY OF HUMAN ACTION (Aristotle's Eth. Nic. VI and Heidegger's commentaries)

1.1. The topography of the truth. How the soul “discloses the truth”	101
1.2. Quarrel of wisdom and prudence	102
1.3. “Parts” of the soul and their virtues	103
1.3.1. The soul as the first entelecheia	103
1.3.2. Corporeality and responsible act	104

1.3.3. Eternal and temporal truth (αἰών and καιρός)	105
1.4. Prudence	107
1.5. Principles of action	109
1.6. Εὐπραξία, εὐδαιμονία and Eigentlichkeit	111
1.7. Noema and phronema	116

CHAPTER FIVE

GOD WITHOUT BEING AND THOUGHT WITHOUT THINKER

1. The source of being which "is not" (On the Divine Names V 5)	120
1.1. What never was nor will be; what is not	120
1.2. On the poetic way of naming	123
1.3. Naming by analogy	125
1.4. To see the invisible	128
1.5. Energeia and essence	131
1.6. Analogia mentis	133
1.7. Maximus the Confessor on the two parts of the human soul	137
2. The paradoxes of reflection in Husserl's phenomenology (The transcendental subject lost)	139
2.1. Da-sein and Bewußt-sein	140
2.2. Empty and filled	144
2.3. The ego pursuing itself	150

CHAPTER SIX

SEARCHING FOR THE LOST SUBJECT

1. The genealogy of subjectivity	157
1.1. Predecessors and heirs of the transcendental subject	157
1.2. Negative analogy	159
1.3. Categories and existentialia	160
1.4. Ὑποκείμενον and subjectum	162
1.5. The subject and the ego	164
1.5.1. The fundamental axiom of classical ontology. Existence and positivity	165
1.5.2. Man assumes the role of subject	166
1.6. The category as the internal structure of existence	167
1.7. Whatness and whoness	168
1.7.1. Category as a determination of the transcendental subject	168
1.7.2. The limits of analogy	169
2. Care as the successor of subjectivity (Ontology of being-ready-to-hand)	171
2.1. Being as "having-to-be"	171
2.2. The existential structure of care	172
2.3. Entity-within-the-world and its being	173
2.4. The sphere of equipment	174
2.4.1. The totality of involvement	176
2.4.2. For-the-sake-of-which and for-whose-sake	178
2.4.3. The ontological concept of care	178
3. The unity of the thing and the unity of care	180
3.1. Negative analogy as a distinction	180
3.2. Entity as "one"	180

3.2.1. Aristotle: the "one" as essence	181
3.3. The unity of the ready-to-hand as a topological unity	182
3.3.1. The tool as "one"	182
3.3.2. Interpretation and freeing of the thing	183
3.4. The topos of Da	184

CHAPTER SEVEN

PRIMORDIAL TEMPORALITY AND ONTOLOGICAL DIFFERENCE

1. Care as primordial temporality	186
1.1. Being-ready-to-hand and the time of dealing	186
1.2. "Tendency" before the cogito	187
1.2. Understanding, interpretation and the meaning of meaning	189
1.3.1. The meaning of care	190
1.4. The ecstases of temporality	192
1.4.1. The forthcoming	192
1.4.2. The past	192
1.4.3. The present as the "twinkling of an eye"	193
1.5. Ecstatic tripartite unity of time and topological unity of Dasein	194
1.5.1. The point of the "now" and the unity of the transcendental subject	195
1.5.2. Involvement and the horizon of an object	196
1.6. Understanding of being and transcendence of Dasein	197
1.7. The concept of schematism	199
1.7.1. Directional sense and horizontal schema	199
1.7.2. Kant's transcendental schema	200
1.7.3. Schematism of temporal ecstases and the unity of horizontal schemata	201
2. The ontological difference	203
2.1. Two forms of ontological difference	203
2.2. The ready-to-hand, the present-at-hand and the existential ontological modification	206
2.3. Being-what and being-how of the ready-to-hand	207
2.4. Praesens as the horizon of the present	208
2.4.1. Praesens as being-ready-to-hand	209
2.4.2. Praesens in the "twinkling of an eye"	210
2.5. Being-what (essence) and being-how (existence) of the present-at-hand	210
2.6. Absolute temporal flow and primordial temporality	212
2.7. Possibility of all that which is possible	217
2.8. Differentia differens	218
