

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	xi
Chapter 1: A 'biographical positioning'	1
Chapter 2: Introduction: philosophising about educational research	13
Philosophising and educational research	13
Philosophising about educational research	13
Introduction to the chapters which follow	16
Chapter 3: Philosophising as and in educational research	21
Philosophy and educational research	21
Philosophising as research	21
Conceptual clarification and educational research	24
The logic and the psychology of the development of theory	26
Dissolving the empirical/philosophical divide	28
Conclusion	31
Chapter 4: The discipline(s) of educational research	33
Educational research as disciplined enquiry	33
Education is a field of (applied?) research	33
Educational research draws on established disciplines of enquiry and representation	36
Discipline and post-disciplinarity	40
Disciplines: necessary but not sufficient	42
Practitioner/action research and discipline based enquiry	45
Chapter 5: Educational theory, practice and research: pragmatic perspectives	51
Introduction	51
Pragmatism	51
The limits of pragmatism	56
Extending the 'experiencing nature'	59
Theory revisited	62
Research revisited – and conclusion	64
Chapter 6: Educational research: pursuit of truth or flight into fancy?	67
Introduction	67
Statements, propositions and truth	68
Counter-examples	69
Other forms of speech act	69
The psycho dynamics of language	69
Retreating to the primeval grunt	69

CONTENTS

Propositions of contested status	70
Lying and deceit	70
Being mistaken	70
The denial of truth	71
Five theories of truth	71
(1) Truth as correspondence	72
(2) Truth as coherence	74
(3) Truth as 'what works'	75
(4) Truth as consensus	76
(5) Truth as warranted belief	78
Theories of truth and paradigms of educational research	80
Truth and constructivism in fourth generation evaluation	81
Truth and the post-modern researcher	84
 Chapter 7: Narratives, fiction and the magic of the real	 89
Qualitative research and literary form	89
Two contrasting narratives	91
The real	94
The real as the gold standard	96
The real and the unasked question	97
Fiction and falsification	98
The magic of the real	100
Conclusion	102
Postscript: a 'research report' in a work of fiction	103
 Chapter 8: Narratives in history, fiction and educational research	 105
History and historical fiction: some resemblance	105
History as literature written under handicap	107
'Wie es eigentlich gewesen' – 'scientific' history and the break with literature	108
History as narrative (again)	110
The distinction between the historical and fictional narrative	111
Ending	113
 Chapter 9: Quality and relevance in educational research	 115
Introduction	115
Quality	116
Relevance	120
Impact	122
Quality again	125
Scholarly rigour	127
Imagination, fecundity and vision	128
Style	130
Ethical considerations	131
Conclusion	132

CONTENTS

Chapter 10: ‘Nothing about us without us’: ethics and outsider research	133
Introduction	133
Only insiders can properly represent the experience of a community	134
Outsiders import damaging frameworks of understanding	137
Outsiders exploit insider participants in the communities they research	142
Outsiders’ research disempowers insiders	144
Practitioner research: the answer?	148
Chapter 11: Research for sale: moral market or moral maze?	153
Introduction	153
The proposition	156
Epistemic drift and the publication of research	157
A moral argument against restrictive ownership of educational research	159
Knowledge and politics	160
The moral maze	164
Educational research and ‘the delinquent academy’	166
Summary and conclusion	169
Chapter 12: ‘Fiction written under oath’? Ethics and epistemology in educational research	171
Introduction	171
Ethical principles constitute an obstacle to validity and truth in research	172
Ethical principles provide the necessary social or interpersonal conditions for the achievement of validity and truth in research	173
Ethical principles provide necessary conditions for the quality of individual research and hence the validity and truthfulness of the claims which issue from it	174
Ethical principles provide both the necessary and sufficient conditions for the validity and truthfulness of the outcomes of research	176
Chapter 13: From philosophising about research to researching philosophy: reflections on a reflective log	181
Introduction	181
Writing as part of a personal story	182
Personal and professional distractions	182
Continuity and antecedents	183
Inactivity and the unconscious	183
Writing as a social practice	184
Networking and intellectual community	184
Enquiry made public	185
Writing as a literary activity	187
Personal voice and published voices	187
A literary construction	188
Writing as an attempt to satisfy (methodo)logical requirements	189
The intellectualisation of perplexity	189
Argument and counter argument	190

CONTENTS

Observing some relevant distinctions 190

Representation of the field 191

Conclusion: so what I have learned? 191

References 193

Index 207

<http://www.springer.com/978-1-4020-1083-5>

Fiction written under Oath?

Essays in Philosophy and Educational Research

Bridges, D.

2003, XII, 215 p., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-1-4020-1083-5