

Contents

Dedication	v
Acknowledgements	vi
1 Ethnography, Fieldwork, and Design: Preliminary Remarks	1
1.1 Preamble	1
1.1.1 What Is Fieldwork, and Is Ethnography a Special Kind of Fieldwork?	6
1.1.2 Where Does One Start or Is a View from Nowhere Acceptable?	6
1.1.3 What Is Done When One Does ‘Fieldwork’?	7
1.1.4 How Does One Decide What and Who Might Be the Appropriate Subjects of an Enquiry?	8
1.1.5 How Do We Orient to Ethnographic Data Either During Feedback Processes or Subsequent to the Fieldwork?	9
1.2 Overview of the Book	9
Part 1 Theoretical and Analytic Issues
2 The State of Play	15
2.1 Disciplinary Assumptions, Fieldwork, and Ethnography	17
2.1.1 Cognitive Work Analysis	19
2.2 Sociological Method, Sensibility, and Analytic Stance	23
2.2.1 Contextual Design	26
2.3 The Third Variant: Ethnomethodological Indifference	33
2.3.1 Designing Collaborative Systems	35
2.4 Morals and Metaphors	39
2.4.1 Issues Arising	44

2.5	Conclusion	52
2.5.1	Ethnography Is Part of a Social Science Tradition	52
2.5.2	Ethnography Is Naturalistic	54
2.5.3	Ethnography Is Prolonged	55
2.5.4	Ethnographic Enquiries Seek to Elicit the Social World from the Point of View of Those Who Inhabit It	56
2.5.5	Ethnographic Data Resist Formalisation	57
3	Some Perspectives	59
3.1	Grounded Theory – Glaser and Strauss	61
3.1.1	The Constant Comparative Method	67
3.2	Participative Design (PD)	70
3.2.1	The Politics of Design	71
3.2.2	Participation	73
3.2.3	Methods, Tools, and Techniques	76
3.3	Conversation Analysis and Interaction Analysis	78
4	Activity Theory, Distributed Cognition, and Actor-Network Theory	89
4.1	Activity Theory	89
4.2	Distributed Cognition	99
4.3	Actor-Network Theory (ANT)	104
4.4	Ethnomethodology	109
4.4.1	Ethnomethodological Studies of Work	118
4.4.2	Ethnomethodologically Informed Ethnography: Clearing up Confusions	122
4.4.3	Why? Questions	123
4.4.4	Perspective and Practicality	123
 Part 2 Methods for Social Investigation: Practical Issues
5	Ethnography and Its Role in the Design Process - ‘If You Must Work Together’	135
5.1	The Purposes of Method	137
5.2	Practical Matters	139
5.2.1	Ethnography, Data, and Design	140
5.2.2	Analysis Versus Synthesis	141
5.2.3	Nonjudgmental Versus Judgmental Investigation	141
5.2.4	The Prolonged Nature of Ethnographic Analysis	143

5.2.5	Problems of Working Together	143
5.2.6	Time and Cost	144
5.2.7	The 'In the Head' Nature of Some Data	144
5.2.8	The Distributed Nature of Many Activities	145
5.2.9	The Problem of Formalisation	146
5.3	The Purposes of Fieldwork	147
5.3.1	Establishing and Maintaining a Corpus	147
5.3.2	Sensitizing Design	148
5.3.3	Informing Requirements	148
5.3.4	Orienting to Purpose	149
5.4	Developing Forms of Ethnography for CSCW	152
5.4.1	Re-Examination of Previous Studies	154
5.4.2	'Quick and Dirty' or 'Lightweight' Ethnography	155
5.4.3	Concurrent Ethnography	157
5.4.4	Evaluative Ethnography	159
5.5	Extending Ethnography's Remit	161
5.5.1	Academic Versus Commercial Arenas	161
5.5.2	Applying Research to Systems Design and Change Management Issues	162
5.6	Refining the Framework: Technology and Development History	163
5.6.1	Purpose of Enquiry	163
5.6.2	Status of Technology	164
5.6.3	Type of Domain	166
5.6.4	Type of Design Team	167
6	Ethnography and How to Do It	169
6.1	The Practical Problems of Ethnographic Inquiries	170
6.1.1	Access	170
6.2	Some Lessons	178
6.2.1	Gear Fieldwork Requirements to What the Organisation Can Reasonably Provide	178
6.2.2	Do Not Dissemble About Requirements	178
6.2.3	What Is in It for the Organisation?	179
6.2.4	Be Clear About Arrangements	179
6.2.5	Organisations Have Their Politics	179
6.2.6	Try to Get Direct Access to the Research Site	180

6.3	The Role of the Fieldworker	180
6.3.1	Focus of the Study	183
6.4	What to Record: Technological Support for Ethnography	184
6.4.1	Routine ‘Troubles’	185
6.5	Video	188
6.6	Tape Recording	190
6.7	Asking Questions	190
6.8	Duration of the Study	192
6.9	Tool Support for Recording Results	192
6.9.1	Summary	197
 Part 3 Analytic Issues: What Have We Got?
7	Common sense and Context	201
7.1	Preamble	201
7.2	An Illustration: The ‘Three-Second’ Ethnography: The Girl on the Bus	202
8	Organisations and Work	209
8.1	Overview of the Chapter	211
8.2	Themes and Analytic Devices	213
8.3	Planning, Plans, and Procedures	214
8.4	Artefacts	221
8.5	The Flow of Work	231
8.6	Normal Natural Troubles	244
8.6.1	Conclusion	251
9	Into the Home	255
9.1	Overview	257
9.2	Background: Prior Research on Home Life and Families	260
9.3	Conceptual Distinctions: Family, Domestic Space: Geography or Morality?	264
9.4	Our Initial Topics	267
9.4.1	Individual Versus Collaborative Activity and the Issue of Personalisation	267
9.4.2	Connectivity/Information Use	267
9.4.3	Ease of Use/Usability/Overhead	268
9.4.4	Usefulness/Fitness for Purpose	268
9.4.5	Location	268
9.4.6	Trust/Reliability	268

9.5	Thematics: The Moral Order	269
9.6	Artefacts	270
9.6.1	Personalisation	272
9.6.2	Tailorability and Aesthetics	274
9.6.3	The Flow of Domestic Work	275
9.6.4	Sensualities: The Body and the Home	278
9.6.5	Social Connectivity	282
9.6.6	Normal Troubles	284
9.7	Conclusion	286
10	Conclusion: Not the Last Word	289
10.1	The Relationship Between Ethnography and Fieldwork	290
10.2	Ethnographic Descriptions and the 'View from Nowhere'	291
10.3	Doing Fieldwork: The Minor Nature of Methodological Problems.....	292
10.3.1	Virtual Ethnography	292
10.3.2	Sensitive Settings	294
10.3.3	Scope and Ambition: Who Are the Appropriate Subjects of an Enquiry?	295
10.3.4	Public Settings: Mobility	297
10.4	Summary: Analysis and the Design Process	298
	Bibliography	301
	Author Index	321
	Subject Index	325

<http://www.springer.com/978-1-84628-767-1>

Fieldwork for Design

Theory and Practice

Randall, D.; Harper, R.; Rouncefield, M.

2007, XI, 331 p., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-1-84628-767-1