

Preface

This book is an expanded and revised version of my thesis, submitted for the Ph.D degree in October 2006 at the University of Cambridge. It has been an honour and joy to work with many individuals, both inside and outside the university town, who made this book possible.

First and foremost, my most sincere appreciation goes to my PhD supervisor, mentor and friend Nick Sinclair-Brown for his careful, insightful and efficient supervision during my doctoral studies in Cambridge. Without his generous and indispensable help neither the conduct of the Ph.D. study nor the accomplishment of the book would have been possible. The design and plan of the doctoral work were wholly due to him. I still remembered the day when he met me at the Finlay Library of the Lauterpacht Centre, for there I received first encouragement to study this challenging topic, an encouragement provided by generous interest and support of Nick. Over the following years, his outlook and confidence in my work gave me much inspiration, and his penetrating comments contributed enormously to the production of my thesis. I appreciate his wisdom, vigilance and sense of humour, without which I would have been either flattered or perplexed on numerous occasions. I have been deeply grateful that, during his heavy cancer treatment in Brussels, he still managed to read through my thesis and offered me detailed feedback and comments. Unfortunately, Nick passed away after fighting the illness with his bravery and morality without seeing the completion of my dissertation and my book in which he had invested much time and energy.

I must also express my particular thanks to my supervisor, mentor and friend Dr. Robert Weatherley for his timely and effective guidance at the late stage of my work. Dr. Weatherley had been fully supportive of my work from the moment we had the first meeting and encouraged me to develop the thesis further into a book. As a leading China expert, his discussions with me concerning the role of China in its transitional period and its impact on global trade helped expand my perspectives. I have learned much from him, particularly in understanding the inherent complexities at the interface of law, politics and history.

I would also express my heartfelt thanks to my Ph.D. examiner Dr. Nick Foster, who graciously offered me his stimulating comments and thought-provoking observations on various portions of my thesis. His insightful perspectives, particularly on comparative law and legal transplants, offered me a constant source of inspiration, reflection and affirmation.

Special thanks also belong to my fellow mentors at the Centre of International Studies and the Lauterpacht Centre for International Law, University of Cambridge, where students are nourished not only by theory but also by spirit. I would like to express my gratitude to Professor Christopher Hill, Professor James Crawford, Dr. Charles Jones, Dr. Philip Towle, Dr. Brendan Simms, Mr. John Forsyth and Dr. Shogo Suzuki for their different forms of support.

My deepest thanks are also given to my College – St John’s, which provides me a cosy home and favourable guidance. Living and working for more than five years at St John’s, a “so pretty and picturesque” College that the Queen Victoria admired, has been an inspirational and unforgettable experience. I owe a special debt of gratitude to my College Tutors Dr. Sue Colwell, Dr. Maire Ni Mhaonaigh and Dr. Victoria Best for their care and a sense of proportion. I should also thank the College library and its helpful staff. It was in the library that I spent most of my stressful but enjoyable working time during my doctorate study in Cambridge.

I would also like to mention Professor Pierre Klein of Centre de Droit International, ULB, Brussels, for his generous help during my field trip to Brussels. I would also like to thank Mr. Christopher De Vroey at DG Trade, European Commission, for offering me firsthand knowledge of EU-China Trade Relations and Intellectual Property and his comments on my project. Thanks should also be given to Dr. Amanda Perry for her fascinating ideas on the survey infrastructure. I would also like to express my gratitude to Mr. Yong Zhu at the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Mr. Wuwei Jin at the Legislative Affairs Office of the State Council, for providing me helpful research materials.

A special debt of gratitude is owed to Professor Robert Gordon and his family who have committed their time, passion and love over the past years during my time in Cambridge. Without their sustaining support, I would certainly have stagnated at some point.

Mention should also be made to my friends Boping Yuan, Jianbo Lou, Kyuseok Moon, Alex Broadbent, Beth Bower, and Wengang Weng who lent emotional support and shared their knowledge with me over the years, particularly during my times of struggle.

I thank Bangor University Law School for a world of hope, encouragement and wisdom. I am grateful for Thomas Watkin, Howard Johnson, Dermot Cahill, Aled Griffiths and other distinguished colleagues who placed much confidence in me and offered me much support in finalising this book.

I would also like to express my deep appreciation to Ms Brigitte Reschke and Ms Manuela Ebert of Springer for their high degree of confidence and patience, and their continuous support during various stages of the publication process. Their consideration, determination and great expertise have helped me improve the manuscript of this book considerably.

My very special appreciation goes to my parents Shengyun Shi and Xinru Liang, my wife Aihua, my son Xiaotian, as well as my brothers and sisters who have given me endless love and tireless support. My parents, who had taught in different schools for over thirty years before their retirement, have given me as much as they can. I have been thankful to my parents for inheriting some of my father's faith and some of my mother's scepticism and I have tried to reconcile and integrated the two in my lifelong experiences. I owe a particular debt to my elderly parents for not being able to look after them in a time when they did need caring. I am grateful for the sacrifice of my wife who quitted her government position in China and endeavoured to manage the home in Cambridge; I have to thank my fabulous son for tolerating me to tap into his innocence of his young life, despite his consecutive good grades in his schools.

Finally, and by no means last, the financial contributions from St John's College, Cambridge Overseas Trust, and the China Scholarship Council are gratefully acknowledged.

February 2008

Wei Shi

<http://www.springer.com/978-3-540-77736-6>

Intellectual Property in the Global Trading System
EU-China Perspective

Shi, W.

2008, XVI, 324 p. 2 illus., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-3-540-77736-6