

Preface

This dissertation was written at the European Institute for International Economic Relations (EIIW) at the University of Potsdam and at the University of Wuppertal and was, at the beginning, connected with the Research Project “Integration of Russia into the World Economy.” Financial support of this project by the Alfried Krupp von Bohlen and Halbach-Foundation is greatly appreciated. This dissertation was completed, thanks to the scholarship of the Friedrich-Naumann-Foundation. Many thanks for this financial support and encouragement towards a more liberal way of thinking.

I am indebted to many people for the successful completion of this research work. My first debt of gratitude must go to my supervisor, Prof. Dr. Paul J.J. Welfens. He patiently provided the vision, encouragement, and advice necessary for me to complete my dissertation. I would also like to thank Prof. Dr. Ronald Schettkat for being my second supervisor as well as Prof. Dr. Norbert Koubek, Prof. Dr. Hans Frambach, and Prof. Dr. Hans-Joachim Niessen for being members of the exam commission. I convey my sincere thanks to Prof. Dr. Justus Haucap for fruitful discussions and helpful suggestions as well as for his support during my scholarship time. Thanks go out to my colleagues from Wuppertal and Potsdam: Dr. Dora Borbely, PD Dr. Andre Jungmittag, Jens Perret, Christopher Schumann, Martin Keim, Michael Vogelsang, Dr. Ralf Wiegert, Zornitsa Kutlina, and Edeltraut Friese, who supported me with helpful ideas and discussions as well as provided their morale support. I extend special thanks to my colleague Jaroslav Ponder, who not only encouraged me to write this dissertation in the first place, but also has been an unending source of fruitful advice and suggestion, as well as constructive criticism. I owe a debt to Prof. Dr. Gerhard Arminger as well as to Dr. Sergey Gelman for their valuable econometrics support. I thank Daniel Nies, Dagmar Cordes, and Ulrike Boller for the editing and proofreading of this book.

I am extremely grateful for the assistance, generosity, and advice I received from Reinhard Wieck and Dr. Andreas Fier during my research stay at the Deutsche Telekom. Their support strongly increased the practice orientation of my dissertation.

Finally, I thank my parents for their love, support, encouragement, and understanding in dealing with all the challenges I have faced. I am especially grateful to my dear spouse Laszlo, who strongly motivated me to finish this dissertation, especially during the last difficult years. Without their help, this dissertation would not have been written.

This dissertation is dedicated to my parents, who always made my education one of their top priorities, and who taught me to never ever give up.
