

Contents

Part I A Theory of Persons and Selves for Psychology

1 Introduction: The Problem of Selves and Persons in Psychology	3
A Brief, Selective History of Persons and Selves	10
Plato to Locke	10
After Locke	16
Psychology's Hobbesian Legacy	19
Hobbes' Compatibilist View of Human Agency	20
Problematic Aspects of Psychology's Hobbesian Legacy	21
2 A Theory of Self and Personhood for Psychology	27
A Brief Conceptualization of Personhood	27
A Developmental Theory of Situated, Agentive Personhood	28
Our Developmental Theory	33
Self as a Kind of Understanding that Discloses and Extends
Particular Being Within Traditions of Living	36
Possible Challenges to Conceptualizing the Self
as an Understanding	38
Implications for Understanding Human Agency	40
Concluding Remarks	42
3 The Political Disposition of Self as a Kind of Understanding	45
Liberal and Communitarian Dispositions of Self	46
The Political Disposition of Self as a Kind of Understanding	50

Part II Human Agency and the Irreducibility of Persons

4 Persons and Moral Agency	57
Taylor's Critique of Naturalism	58
Moral Ontology	59
Personhood in Question	63
Taylor's Moral Ontology in Question	65

Persons and Moral Agency: A Psychological Perspective	67
Conclusion	70
5 Emergent Persons	73
Examples and Claims of Recent Emergentist Theorizing in Psychology	75
Shared and Disputed Claims	77
An Emergent Ontology of Persons	79
Reductionism Versus Emergence	79
Additional Assumptions Concerning the Emergence of Psychological Persons	80
Levels of Reality	82
Phylogenesis	82
Ontogenesis	84
Concluding Comment	85
6 John Macmurray's Philosophy of the Personal and the Irreducibility of Persons	87
Human Agency and the Form of the Personal	88
Human Relations and the Form of the Personal	90
Implications for a Psychology of the Personal	96
 Part III Perspectives, Selves, and Persons
7 Real Perspectival Selves	103
Against Strong Naturalism and the Illusory Self	104
Against Strong Constructionism and the Fictional Self	106
The Perspectival Self	109
The Developmental Emergence of the Perspectival Self	111
What is Real?	113
Conclusion	116
8 Perspectival Selves in Interaction with Others: Re-reading G.H. Mead's Social Psychology	117
Mead's Theory of Perspectives: Sociality and Agentive Selfhood . .	119
Mead's Dialectic of Self and Other	125
Engagement with Others: A Neo-Meadian Perspective	127
Conclusions	135
9 Perspectives and Persons: Ontological, Constitutive Possibilities	137
Perspective Taking, Perspectives, and Persons	138
Perspectives and Persons: A Selection of Extant Formulations . . .	143
Practices, Perspectives, and Persons	148
Some Possibilities for the Study and Promotion of Perspective Taking	150
Conclusion	152

10 The Psychology of Persons: An Idea Whose Time Has Come (Again)	155
Conceptualizing Persons	156
The Coordinating Activity and Interactivity of Embodied, Embedded, and Emergent Persons	158
Phylogenesis	159
Ontogenesis	162
Agency as the Self-Determination of Persons	164
Further Ontological and Epistemological Considerations	165
The Psychology of Persons: Today and Yesterday	170
Toward a Psychology of Coordination: The Emergence and Transformation of Persons	172
Afterword	175
References	179
Index	189

Persons: Understanding Psychological Selfhood and Agency

Martin, J.; Sugarman, J.H.; Hickinbottom, S.

2010, XIII, 196 p., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-1-4419-1064-6