

Acknowledgements

We wish to acknowledge and express our gratitude to several persons without whose support this book could not have been completed. First, to the staff, parents and students of the Crimson Brook Secondary College community within which this research took place who graciously welcomed us into their school and gave so generously of their time. Special thanks go to those who participated in the interviews and provided such valuable insights into reproduction and transformation in disadvantaged schools.

We would also like to thank those whose interest and encouragement contributed more directly to the production of this work. They include: the staff at Springer, who were so obliging and patient with us; our colleagues at The University of Queensland and University of South Australia, for their valuable feedback and advice; our friends and family, for encouraging us throughout the production of the manuscript; and, most importantly, our respective partners, Nathan and Pam, for their ongoing love and support. The manuscript was produced during a period of great personal and professional challenge, so we thank you all for helping us to keep our ‘eye on the prize’.

Finally, portions of this book have appeared elsewhere in different forms and have been reworked for inclusion here. We would like to thank the publishers for permission to make use of the following materials: a version of Chap. 2 originally appeared in Mills, C., & Gale, T. (2007). Researching social inequalities in education: Towards a Bourdieuan methodology. International Journal of Qualitative Studies in Education, 20(4), 433–447 and can be accessed from <http://www.informaworld.com>; Chap. 6 in Mills, C. (2007). Transforming the capital that counts: Making a difference for students with cultural capital in the ‘wrong’ currency. Curriculum Perspectives, 27(3), 11–21; and Chap. 8 in Mills, C., & Gale, T. (2004). Parent participation in disadvantaged schools: Moving beyond attributions of blame. Australian Journal of Education, 48(3), 268–281. Reproduced with kind permission. Subscribe by visiting <http://www.acer.edu.au/aje/subscriptions.html>. Reworked portions of Chaps. 4, 5 and 7 also appeared in Mills, C., & Gale, T. (2003). Transient teachers: Mixed messages of schooling in regional Australia. Journal of Research in Rural Education, 18(3), 145–151; Mills, C., & Gale, T. (2002). Schooling and the (re)production of social inequalities: What can and should we be doing? Melbourne Studies in Education, 43(1), 107–128; and Mills, C. (2008). Opportunity and resignation within marginalised students: Towards a theorisation of the reproductive and transformative habitus. Critical Studies in Education, 49(2), 99–111.
