

Contents

1	Issues in Grammar Learning and Teaching	1
1.1	Introduction	1
1.1.1	Grammar in Language Education	2
1.1.2	Explicit and Implicit L2 Knowledge	7
1.1.3	Research into the Processes of Acquisition of Second Language Grammar	10
1.1.4	Product Versus Process Perspectives on Grammar.	23
1.2	Conclusion	27
2	Theoretical Perspectives on Grammar Learning and Teaching	29
2.1	Introduction	29
2.2	Non-Interventionist Positions	30
2.2.1	Theoretical Justifications for Non-Interventionist Positions	31
2.2.2	Pedagogical Applications of the Non-Interventionist Position	41
2.3	Theoretical Positions Recognizing the Need for Grammar Instruction.	44
2.3.1	Processability Theory	45
2.3.2	Skill-Learning Theory	47
2.3.3	Noticing Hypothesis	49
2.3.4	Interaction Hypothesis	51
2.3.5	Output Hypothesis.	54
2.3.6	The Delayed-Effect Hypothesis.	56
2.3.7	Connectionist Approaches	57
2.4	Conclusion	58

3	Input-Oriented Approaches to Grammar Teaching	61
3.1	Introduction	61
3.2	A Theory of Input	62
3.2.1	Importance of Input Processing	63
3.2.2	Principles of Input Processing	64
3.2.3	The Role of Output in IP	75
3.3	Input-Oriented Instruction	76
3.3.1	Developing and Conducting Structured Input Activities	77
3.3.2	Interpretation Tasks	83
3.4	Empirical Investigations of Processing Instruction	85
3.4.1	Studies Comparing Input Processing and Traditional Output-Based Instruction	86
3.4.2	Studies Comparing Input Processing to Meaning-Based Output Instruction	95
3.5	Conclusion	98
4	Investigating the Effectiveness of Output-Oriented and Input-Based Instruction in the Language Classroom	101
4.1	Introduction	101
4.2	Study 1: The Use of Interpretation Tasks in Teaching Inversion to Advanced Learners of English	101
4.2.1	Research Questions	102
4.2.2	Choice of the Target Form	102
4.2.3	Participants	104
4.2.4	Design of the Study	105
4.2.5	Instructional Treatment	106
4.2.6	Data Collection and Analysis	107
4.2.7	Results and Discussion	108
4.3	Study 2: Input Processing Versus Production Practice in the Teaching of the Passive Voice	112
4.3.1	Choice of the Target Form	112
4.3.2	Research Questions	114
4.3.3	The Design of the Study	114
4.3.4	Participants	114
4.3.5	Instruction and Treatment Materials	115
4.3.6	Data Collection, Coding and Scoring	117
4.3.7	Results and Discussion	118
4.4	Conclusions	122

5 Exploring the Effects of Diversified Treatment Modes on Production and Reception of Grammatical Forms	125
5.1 Introduction	125
5.2 Study 3: The Effects of a Combined, Output- and Input-Oriented Approach in Teaching Reported Speech	126
5.2.1 Research Questions	127
5.2.2 Participants	128
5.2.3 The Design of the Study	128
5.2.4 Instructional Treatments.	129
5.2.5 Data Collection and Analysis	130
5.2.6 Results and Discussion	131
5.2.7 Discussion	135
5.3 Study 4: The Effect of Output Practice and Structured Input Activities on the Development of Explicit and Implicit Knowledge	135
5.3.1 Measuring Explicit and Implicit Language Knowledge.	136
5.3.2 Research Questions	138
5.3.3 Participants	138
5.3.4 Design of the Study	138
5.3.5 Results and Discussion	140
5.4 Conclusion	149
Conclusions and Implications.	151
References	155
Index	171

Production-oriented and Comprehension-based
Grammar Teaching in the Foreign Language Classroom

Mystkowska-Wiertelak, A.; Pawlak, M.

2012, XII, 172 p., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-3-642-20855-3