

Contents

1	Introduction	1
2	Review of Current Use of the Law Merchant in Domestic and International Law	5
2.1	Uniform Commercial Law as Responding to a Need to Promote Uniformity on Behalf of International Trade by Purpose and Scope.	5
2.2	Commercial Contract Law in the Discussions of the Expert Group on the Drafting of a European Contract Law	8
2.3	Special Problems of International Trade	9
2.3.1	...Typically Addressed in Standard Contract Forms	9
2.3.2	...Leading to Specialised Infrastructure in Arbitration and Public Law Initiatives	10
2.4	Choice of Law Issues and Need for Transnational Contractual Regime.	10
2.4.1	Is There a Need for a Specialised Substantive Commercial Contract Law?	11
2.4.2	If There is a Need for Uniform Commercial Contract Law How Can it be Effected Under the Current Choice of Law Regime?	21
2.5	How Can it be Effected with a Comparative Law Approach?	24
2.5.1	Example: Comparative Remedies for Breach of Contract.	24
2.5.2	Good Faith.	25
3	Implementation of Non-State Law: Issues in Private International Law. A Review of Selected Contributions.	27
3.1	Introduction	27
3.2	Choice of Non-State and Transnational Contract Law as Lex Contractus	29

3.3	Choice of Law In Commercial Contracts	30
3.4	Mandatory Laws and Connecting Factors From a UK Perspective	31
3.5	Mandatory Laws and Public Policy	37
3.6	Economic Analysis in the Conflict of Laws	39
3.7	Party Autonomy	40
3.7.1	Party Autonomy in Private International Law: What Law?	40
3.7.2	Public Policy and State Interest: Convergence of US and European Positions?	40
3.7.3	International Antitrust Law: Extraterritoriality	43
3.7.4	Mandatory Law In International Arbitration: Unity of Law and State?	46
3.8	Party Autonomy, Legitimacy and Law Enforcement	48
3.9	Party Autonomy in European Contract Law: The Constitutionalisation Debate in Germany	50
3.10	Taking a Fresh Look at Connecting Factors: The Rome II Regulation	60
4	Conclusion	65
	About the Author	67
	References	69
	Index	73

Does International Trade Need a Doctrine of Transnational Law?
Some Thoughts at the Launch of a European Contract
Law

Heidemann, M.

2012, VIII, 74 p., Softcover

ISBN: 978-3-642-27499-2