
Preface

This doctoral thesis was written while I was working at the Chair of International Taxation led by Prof. Dr. Christoph Spengel and was accepted by the Business School of the University of Mannheim in 2012.

It is my pleasure to thank all those who supported the preparation of this thesis. Foremost, I would like to specially acknowledge the steady support of my thesis supervisor, Prof. Dr. Christoph Spengel, who inspired, professionally guided and constantly encouraged this thesis from its inception to completion. Moreover, I owe him a debt of gratitude for providing an environment in which new ideas could be pursued and for acting as my personal advisor.

In addition, I wish to express my thanks to Prof. Dr. Jens Wüstemann for providing the second assessment of this thesis as well as Prof. Dr. Andreas Engert for providing the examination in my elective subject. For my academic research stay at the International Bureau of Fiscal Documentation (IBFD) in Amsterdam, without which this thesis would not have been possible, I would also like to acknowledge the support of Prof. Dr. Frans Vanistendael and the Julius Paul Stiegler Memorial Foundation. Further, I thank Prof. Dr. Jaap Bellingwout for his constructive comments.

Many thanks to my colleagues at the chair, the Centre for European Economic Research (ZEW), the Area of Accounting & Taxation of the University of Mannheim and the Mannheim Business School gGmbH for constructive and harmonious collaboration. In particular, I would like to thank Julia Grathwohl, Theresa Lohse and Simone Streisselberger (née Zimmer) for pleasant conversations at a formative time in my life.

Finally, this thesis would not be on hand without those persons, my family and friends, who accompanied me during the last few years. I am deeply indebted to my parents, grandmother and uncle and aunt for backing me up all these years, granting unrestricted freedom to follow my interests, as well as to Julia Czernetzki for her affectionate support and understanding without which this thesis could not have been successfully finished.
