

Contents

|                                                                                                           |            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| Preface                                                                                            | vii |
| B. Vitoriano, J. Montero, and D. Ruan                                                              |            |
|                                                                                                       |            |
| 1. On the Use of Information in Humanitarian Operations                                            | 1   |
| A.J. Pedraza-Martinez                                                                              |            |
| 1.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                                                | 1          |
| 1.2 Levels of Disaster Response . . . . .                                                                 | 3          |
| 1.3 Disaster Preparedness at the National Level: Centers for EnvironmentalPrediction (NCEP) . . . . . | 6          |
| 1.4 Disaster Preparedness and Response: Fleet Management in the Humani-tarian Sector . . . . .        | 8          |
| 1.5 Disaster Response at the International Level: ReliefWeb . . . . .                                     | 11         |
| 1.6 Conclusions and Suggested Areas for Future Research . . . . .                                         | 13         |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                    | 14         |
|                                                                                                       |            |
| 2. Decision Aid Models and Systems for Humanitarian Logistics. A Survey                            | 17  |
| M.T. Ortuño, P. Cristóbal, J.M. Ferrer, F.J. Martín-Campo, S. Muñoz,G. Tirado, B. Vitoriano   |            |
| 2.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                                                | 17         |
| 2.2 Decision Aid Models. Literature Review . . . . .                                                      | 23         |
| 2.3 Decision Aid Systems . . . . .                                                                        | 33         |
| 2.4 Conclusions . . . . .                                                                                 | 38         |

|                                                                                                                             |           |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                                      | 39        |
| 3. Uncertainty in Humanitarian Logistics for Disaster Management.                                                    |           |
| A Review                                                                                                             | 45 |
| F. Liberatore, C. Pizarro, C. Simón de Blas, M.T. Ortuño, and B. Vitoriano                                           |           |
| 3.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                                                                  | 45        |
| 3.2 Uncertainty in disaster management . . . . .                                                                            | 48        |
| 3.3 Methodologies Description . . . . .                                                                                     | 50        |
| 3.4 Annotated Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                        | 54        |
| 3.5 Conclusions . . . . .                                                                                                   | 72        |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                                      | 72        |
| 4. Fuzzy inference systems for disaster response                                                                     | 75 |
| B. Öztayşi, H. Behret, Ö. Kabak, İ. Uçal Sarı, and C. Kahraman                                                       |           |
| 4.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                                                                  | 75        |
| 4.2 Disaster Response System . . . . .                                                                                      | 79        |
| 4.3 Fuzzy Inference Systems . . . . .                                                                                       | 81        |
| 4.4 Literature Review . . . . .                                                                                             | 85        |
| 4.5 A Fuzzy Inference System for Spontaneous Volunteer Management . . .                                                     | 87        |
| 4.6 Conclusion . . . . .                                                                                                    | 90        |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                                      | 91        |
| 5. Security Based Operation in Container Line Supply Chain                                                           | 95 |
| D. Tang, D.-L. Xu, J.-B. Yang, and Y.-w. Chen                                                                        |           |
| 5.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                                                                  | 95        |
| 5.2 Basic Definitions . . . . .                                                                                             | 97        |
| 5.3 Current research on security issues in CLSC . . . . .                                                                   | 98        |
| 5.4 Summary and limitations of current research and potential directions forfuture research for CLSC security . . . . . | 109       |
| 5.5 Conclusion . . . . .                                                                                                    | 111       |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                                      | 111       |

|                                                                                     |            |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 6. A Linguistic-Valued Information Processing Method for Fuzzy Risk Analysis | 117 |
| L. Zou, Z. Pei, D. Ruan, and Y. Xu                                           |            |
| 6.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                          | 118        |
| 6.2 Preliminaries . . . . .                                                         | 120        |
| 6.3 Risk Analysis Based on Linguistic Aggregation . . . . .                         | 128        |
| 6.4 Risk Analysis Based on $L_{10}$ . . . . .                                       | 137        |
| 6.5 Conclusion . . . . .                                                            | 140        |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                              | 141        |
| 7. A Belief Rule-Based Generic Risk Assessment Framework                     | 145 |
| J. Liu, S. Chen, L. Martinez, and H. Wang                                    |            |
| 7.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                          | 145        |
| 7.2 Hazard Associated Risk Specification Parameters . . . . .                       | 149        |
| 7.3 A Belief-Rule Based Generic Hazard Risk Assessment Framework . . . . .          | 151        |
| 7.4 A Belief-Rule Based Generic Hierarchical Risk Assessment Framework . . . . .    | 159        |
| 7.5 Conclusions and Outlook . . . . .                                               | 165        |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                              | 166        |
| 8. Fuzzy semantics in closed domain question answering                       | 171 |
| M.-A. Abchir, I. Truck, and A. Pappa                                         |            |
| 8.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                          | 171        |
| 8.2 Disaster or Emergency Management . . . . .                                      | 172        |
| 8.3 Using Natural Language Processing (NLP) Techniques . . . . .                    | 176        |
| 8.4 How to deal with imprecision in our context? . . . . .                          | 178        |
| 8.5 Conclusions . . . . .                                                           | 186        |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                              | 187        |
| 9. Decision Making with Extensions of Fuzzy Sets                             | 189 |
| H. Bustince, M. Pagola, E. Barrenechea, C. Lopez-Molina, J. Fernandez        |            |
| 9.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                          | 189        |
| 9.2 Preliminary concepts . . . . .                                                  | 191        |

|            |                                                                                                           |            |
|------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 9.3        | Construction of Interval-valued Fuzzy Preference Relations from Fuzzy Preference Relations . . . . .      | 194        |
| 9.4        | Two generalizations of the weighted voting strategy . . . . .                                             | 196        |
| 9.5        | Two examples . . . . .                                                                                    | 202        |
| 9.6        | Advantages of the method . . . . .                                                                        | 204        |
| 9.7        | Conclusions . . . . .                                                                                     | 205        |
|            | Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                    | 206        |
| 10. | Classification of Disasters and Emergencies under Bipolar Knowledge Representation                 | 209 |
|            | J.T. Rodríguez, B. Vitoriano, D. Gómez, J. Montero                                                 |            |
| 10.1       | Introduction . . . . .                                                                                    | 209        |
| 10.2       | Problem description . . . . .                                                                             | 211        |
| 10.3       | Strategic disaster severity assessment as an structured classification problem . . . . .                  | 214        |
| 10.4       | SEDD's bipolar classification methodology . . . . .                                                       | 220        |
| 10.5       | Conclusions . . . . .                                                                                     | 230        |
|            | Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                    | 231        |
| 11. | A Network Transshipment Model for Planning Humanitarian Relief Operations after a Natural Disaster | 233 |
|            | A. Clark and B. Culkin                                                                             |            |
| 11.1       | Introduction . . . . .                                                                                    | 233        |
| 11.2       | Planning For Humanitarian Relief Operations . . . . .                                                     | 235        |
| 11.3       | Models Developed by other Researchers . . . . .                                                           | 237        |
| 11.4       | A Network Transshipment model for Emergency Relief . . . . .                                              | 238        |
| 11.5       | Computational Analysis and Model Refinement . . . . .                                                     | 244        |
| 11.6       | Recommendations and Conclusions . . . . .                                                                 | 254        |
|            | Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                    | 255        |

|                                                                                                                |            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 12. A Travel Behaviour Study through Learning and Clustering of Fuzzy Cognitive Maps                    | 259 |
| M. León, L. Mkrtchyan, B. Depaire, D. Ruan, and K. Vanhoof                                              |            |
| 12.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                                                    | 259        |
| 12.2 Modelling with Fuzzy Cognitive Maps . . . . .                                                             | 263        |
| 12.3 Capturing individuals' mental representation: Automatic knowledge engineering and FCM modelling . . . . . | 270        |
| 12.4 A learning method for FCMs inspired on Particle Swarm Optimization . .                                    | 273        |
| 12.5 Clustering of Fuzzy Cognitive Maps . . . . .                                                              | 279        |
| 12.6 Clustering and learning: digging deeper into individuals mental maps . .                                  | 285        |
| 12.7 Conclusions . . . . .                                                                                     | 290        |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                         | 291        |
| 13. Fire and explosion safety assessment in container line supply chain                                 | 295 |
| Y.-w. Chen, D.-L. Xu, J.-B. Yang, and D. Tang                                                           |            |
| 13.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                                                    | 295        |
| 13.2 Review of safety-related regulations and assessment approaches . . . . .                                  | 297        |
| 13.3 Fire and explosion safety assessment . . . . .                                                            | 298        |
| 13.4 Conclusion . . . . .                                                                                      | 304        |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                         | 305        |
| 14. A Human Situation Awareness Support System to Avoid Technological Disasters                         | 307 |
| M. Naderpour and J. Lu                                                                                  |            |
| 14.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                                                    | 307        |
| 14.2 Basic Concepts and Related Works . . . . .                                                                | 309        |
| 14.3 A Human Situation Awareness Support System . . . . .                                                      | 313        |
| 14.4 HSASS Implementation . . . . .                                                                            | 315        |
| 14.5 Conclusion and Future Study . . . . .                                                                     | 324        |
| Bibliography . . . . .                                                                                         | 324        |

Decision Aid Models for Disaster Management and Emergencies

Vitoriano, B.; Montero de Juan, J.; Ruan, D. (Eds.)

2013, XV, 325 p., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-94-91216-73-2

A product of Atlantis Press