

Contents

1 A Controversial Past	1
The Beginnings of a Surgery of the Mind	2
From the First Trephined Skull to Hippocrates	2
The “Stone of Madness” in the Middle Ages: A Pictorial Myth?	2
The Nineteenth Century and the First Scientific Observations	4
Phineas Gage, the Most Famous Injury in Medicine	5
Gottlieb Burckhardt, a Psychiatrist-Surgeon	6
“Shock” Therapies in Psychiatry	7
The Birth of Psychosurgery	8
John Fulton and His Work on the Frontal Lobes of Monkeys	9
Egas Moniz, the Inventor of Psychosurgery	10
The First Intervention: The Prefrontal Leucotomy	11
Premature Results	11
The Skepticism of European Psychiatrists	12
The Rise and Fall of Psychosurgery	12
Freeman, Tireless Promoter of the Lobotomy
in the United States	13
A Global Movement	16
A Timid Start in France	16
Popularity in the United States	17
Elsewhere in Europe and the World	17
The Transorbital or “Ice-Pick” Lobotomy	18
Lobotomy at Its Peak	20
Condemnation	27
Freeman’s Excesses	28
A Painful Realization	29
The Promise of Neuropharmacology	30
Mounting Public Criticism	30
A Timid and Much Criticized Revival	31
Unarguable Technical Progress	32
Narrower Indications and Better Monitoring of Results	33
New Lapses with Brain Stimulation	34
The Unexpected Results of an American Report	36

The Arrival of Neuromodulation	37
References	39
2 The Neuroanatomy of Emotions	49
The Organs of Emotion	51
The Cerebral Cortex	51
The Frontal Lobe	53
The Temporal Lobe	57
The Insula	64
The Parietal Lobe	66
The Occipital Lobe	67
The Hypothalamic-Pituitary Axis and the Septal Area	67
The Hypothalamus	67
The Pituitary Gland	72
The Septal Area	74
The Thalamus and the Basal Ganglia	75
The Thalamus	75
The Subthalamic Nucleus	78
The Striatum and the Pallidum	79
The Nucleus Accumbens	81
Emotion and Its Circuits	83
A Brief History: The Papez Circuit	83
The MacLean Limbic System	86
The Cortico-Striato-Thalamo-Cortical Loops	87
The Motor Loop Circuit as an Example	87
The Associative CSTC Loop	89
The Limbic CSTC Loop	90
The Neurotransmitter Circuits	91
Dopamine and the Reward Circuit	92
Serotonin	94
Norepinephrine and the Stress Circuit	95
References	96
3 Psychosurgical Procedures	107
Stereotaxy	107
Technical Lesioning	111
Procedures Using Thermocoagulation	111
Anatomical Targets	112
The Debatable Results of Clinical Studies	124
Conclusion	125

Radiosurgery	125
Principle and Technique.	125
Indications and Anatomical Targets.	126
Results and Complications	127
Future Applications	127
Stimulation Techniques	128
Deep Brain Stimulation	130
The Contribution of Deep Brain Stimulation to the Treatment of Parkinson's Disease	131
First Successes and the Favorable Opinion of the French National Ethics Advisory Council	131
Principle	132
Technique	136
Surgical Complications	141
Anatomical Targets for Given Indications	141
Conclusion	153
Cortical Stimulation.	154
Repeated Transcranial Magnetic Stimulation	156
Intracranial Cortical Stimulation	158
Stimulation of the Vagus Nerve in the Treatment of Depression . . .	162
Anatomy	162
Principle	163
Procedure.	164
Results.	164
Complications.	166
Future Applications.	166
References	167
4 Disorders for Which Psychosurgery is Relevant Today	187
Obsessive Compulsive Disorders.	187
Frequently Associated Psychiatric Disorders.	188
A Severe Impact on Quality of Life	188
Evaluating OCD and Its Severity	189
Physiopathology	191
Therapeutic Management	193
Cognitive Behavioral Therapies (CBT)	193
Pharmacological Treatments.	193
Surgical Treatments.	194
Lesional Surgery.	195
Deep Brain Stimulation	197
Conclusion	201

Gilles de la Tourette Syndrome	202
Clinical Aspects	203
Associated Disorders	203
Physiopathology	204
Pharmacological Treatments	205
Surgical Treatments	205
Ablative Techniques	205
Deep Brain Stimulation	207
Patient Selection Criteria	208
Conclusion	209
Severe Depression	209
Clinical Aspects	210
Assessment	211
Self-Assessment Scale	211
Hetero-Assessment Scale	211
Physiopathology	215
Therapeutic Management	216
Non-Invasive Techniques	217
Invasive Techniques	219
Conclusion	229
Aggressive Behavior Disorders	230
Amygdalotomy: An Obsolete Technique	232
Cingulectomy, Cingulotomy and Capsulotomy	234
Lesioning and Stimulation of the Posterior Hypothalamus	235
Pallidal Stimulation in Lesch–Nyhan Syndrome	236
Clinical Aspects	236
Physiopathology	236
Pharmacological Treatment	237
Stimulation of the Internal Globus Pallidus	237
Conclusion	238
Addiction	238
Clinical Aspects	239
Physiopathology	239
Procedures	241
Cingulotomy	242
Hypothalamotomy	243
Ablation of the Nucleus Accumbens	244
Deep Brain Stimulation of the Nucleus Accumbens	244
Conclusion	246

Eating Disorders	247
Obesity	247
Hypothalamotomy	249
Deep Brain Stimulation	249
Conclusion	251
Anorexia Nervosa	252
Lesional Surgery During the Sixties	253
Therapeutic Prospects	253
Post-traumatic Stress Disorder.	255
References	256
5 Some Legitimate Ethical Questions.	283
Autonomy	284
A Lack of Discernment	284
The Struggle to Inform Correctly	285
The Issue of Nonautonomous Patients	285
Conflicts of Interest.	287
Society.	287
Medical Practitioners and Researchers	292
The Ambivalence of the Pharmaceutical Industry	293
Should the Patient Be “in Control?”	295
Beneficence	296
Nonmaleficence.	298
Justice	299
Safeguards	299
References	302
6 What Is Next?	309
Some Questions	309
The Influence of Treatments on the Classification of Clinical Entities	309
Lesion or Stimulation?.	310
Ultrasounds	311
Advances	312
New Targets.	312
NBIC Convergence	312
Optogenetics.	314
Toward an Augmented Human?	316
References	317

Conclusion	321
Afterword	323
Thanks	325
Bibliography	327
About the Author	329
Blurb	331
Name Index	333
Index	337

Psychosurgery

New Techniques for Brain Disorders

Lévêque, M.

2014, XXVII, 347 p. 88 illus., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-3-319-01143-1