

Contents

Part I Klaus von Beyme

|                                                                         |    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| 1 Walking on Two Legs . . . . .                                  | 3  |
| 1.1 Personal Background . . . . .                                       | 3  |
| 1.2 Studies on Western Democracies . . . . .                            | 5  |
| 1.3 Studies in Communist Systems and the Transition to Democracy. . .   | 8  |
| 1.4 Implications of Political Theory in the Comparative Perspective . . | 11 |
| 1.5 Conclusion . . . . .                                                | 12 |
| References . . . . .                                                    | 15 |
| 2 The Author's Major Publications . . . . .                      | 19 |
| 2.1 Authored Books . . . . .                                            | 19 |
| 2.2 Edited and Co-edited Books in English . . . . .                     | 21 |
| 2.3 Articles in English . . . . .                                       | 22 |

Part II Key Texts by Klaus von Beyme on Comparative Politics

|                                                                                    |    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| 3 Empirical Political Theory . . . . .                                      | 31 |
| 3.1 A Chronology of Shifting Paradigms. . . . .                                    | 32 |
| 3.2 The Geography of Paradigm Shifts . . . . .                                     | 34 |
| 3.3 Theory and Method: Levels of Theoretical Analysis . . . . .                    | 34 |
| 3.4 Political Trends and Their Impact onTheory-Building in the 1990s . . . . . | 37 |
| References . . . . .                                                               | 39 |
| 4 The Evolution of Comparative Politics . . . . .                           | 41 |
| 4.1 Introduction . . . . .                                                         | 41 |
| 4.2 Comparisons in Pre-modern Times . . . . .                                      | 42 |
| 4.3 Comparisons in the Work of Thinkers in Classical Modernity . . . .             | 44 |
| 4.3.1 Scientific Comparison as Controlled Experiment . . . . .                     | 44 |
| 4.3.2 Typologies and Classifications,The First Step to Comparison. . . . .     | 48 |

|          |                                                                                                 |           |
|----------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| 4.3.3    | Typologies in Comparative Social Sciences. . . . .                                              | 49        |
| 4.3.4    | Matrix: Institutional Mix for the Mitigationof Territorial Conflicts . . . . .              | 50        |
| 4.3.5    | From the Comparisons of 'Polities'and 'Politics' to Comparisons of 'Policies' . . . . .     | 50        |
| 4.4      | Comparison in Post-modern Theories . . . . .                                                    | 53        |
| 4.5      | Conclusions: Political Influences on the Evolutionof Comparative Politics . . . . .         | 54        |
|          | References . . . . .                                                                            | 57        |
| 5 | Neglected Functions of Normative PoliticalTheory in Empirical Research . . . . .    | 59 |
| 5.1      | Political Reasons for the Decline and Resurrectionof Normative Political Theories . . . . . | 59        |
| 5.2      | The 'Rapprochement' Between Normative Theoryand Empirical Research . . . . .                | 61        |
| 5.3      | The Normative Duplication of Social and Political Reality . . . . .                             | 66        |
| 5.4      | Conclusion . . . . .                                                                            | 70        |
|          | References . . . . .                                                                            | 71        |
| 6 | Theodor W. Adorno: Political Theory as Theory of Aesthetics . . . . .                    | 73 |
| 6.1      | Introduction . . . . .                                                                          | 73        |
| 6.2      | Studies in Fascism . . . . .                                                                    | 75        |
| 6.3      | Political Theory as Theory of Aesthetics . . . . .                                              | 77        |
| 6.4      | Philosophical Work on 'Negative Dialectics' . . . . .                                           | 80        |
| 6.5      | A Vision of Good Society? . . . . .                                                             | 82        |
|          | References . . . . .                                                                            | 84        |
| 7 | Historical Forerunners of Policy Analysis . . . . .                                      | 87 |
| 7.1      | Introduction . . . . .                                                                          | 87        |
| 7.2      | The Discovery of Policy and the Heritage of Aristotle . . . . .                                 | 88        |
| 7.3      | 'Reason of State' and 'Sovereignty' as New Conceptsin Political Theory . . . . .            | 89        |
| 7.4      | The Special German Developmentof a Polizei-Staat (State of Police) . . . . .                | 90        |
| 7.5      | Development and Traditions of Polizeiwissenschaft . . . . .                                     | 90        |
| 7.6      | The Decline of the Tradition of Polizeiwissenschaft . . . . .                                   | 92        |
| 7.7      | Conclusions . . . . .                                                                           | 94        |
|          | References . . . . .                                                                            | 95        |
| 8 | Political Institutions: Old and New . . . . .                                            | 97 |
| 8.1      | From Old to New Institutions . . . . .                                                          | 97        |
| 8.2      | The Evolution of Theories of Institutions . . . . .                                             | 100       |
| 8.2.1    | Theories and MethodologicalApproaches to Institutions . . . . .                             | 100       |

|           |                                                                                                                                   |            |
|-----------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 8.2.2     | National Traditions and Transnational Diffusionof Institutions and Theories About Institutions . . . . .                      | 103        |
| 8.2.3     | Institutional Crises and the Para-theoriesof Institutions . . . . .                                                           | 104        |
| 8.3       | Conclusion: Personal Academic Experiencesand Prospects for Institutional Studies. . . . .                                     | 106        |
|           | References. . . . .                                                                                                               | 109        |
| 9  | Representative Democracy and the Populist Temptation . . . . .                                                             | 111 |
| 9.1       | Introduction . . . . .                                                                                                            | 111        |
| 9.2       | Historical and Contemporary Formsof ‘Defective’ Representative Democracies. . . . .                                           | 113        |
| 9.2.1     | Historical Forms. . . . .                                                                                                         | 113        |
| 9.2.2     | Terminological Chaos Revisited:Typologies of Representative Democracies . . . . .                                             | 113        |
| 9.2.3     | Contemporary Forms of DefectiveRepresentative Democracies . . . . .                                                           | 117        |
| 9.3       | Neo-normative Models of Representative Democracies . . . . .                                                                      | 119        |
| 9.4       | Populism as Challenge to Representative Democracy. . . . .                                                                        | 121        |
| 9.5       | Conclusion: ‘Direct PlebiscitarianDemocracy’—The Way Out of LiberalRepresentative, Merely Procedural Democracy? . . . . . | 126        |
|           | References. . . . .                                                                                                               | 128        |
| 10 | Political Scientists as Advisors to Politicians . . . . .                                                                  | 131 |
| 10.1      | Scholars as Political Advisors: My Personal Experience. . . . .                                                                   | 131        |
| 10.2      | The Place of Scientific Advice in theDecision-making System . . . . .                                                         | 136        |
| 10.3      | The Predicament of Policy Advisors:Incomplete Knowledge in Transformation Processes . . . . .                                 | 140        |
| 10.4      | Conclusions: The Future of Policy Advice in Democracies . . . . .                                                                 | 142        |
|           | References. . . . .                                                                                                               | 144        |
| 11 | The Concept of Political Class:A New Dimension of Research on Elites? . . . . .                                       | 145 |
| 11.1      | Introduction . . . . .                                                                                                            | 145        |
| 11.2      | Empirical Evidence for the Existence of a Political Class. . . . .                                                                | 150        |
| 11.2.1    | Social Homogenisation . . . . .                                                                                                   | 151        |
| 11.2.2    | Political Class: What It Does:Tendencies of Separation from the Non-Elites . . . . .                                          | 154        |
| 11.3      | Conclusion . . . . .                                                                                                              | 158        |
|           | References. . . . .                                                                                                               | 161        |
|           | About the Author. . . . .                                                                                                  | 163 |
|           | About the Book . . . . .                                                                                                   | 165 |

Klaus von Beyme

Pioneer in the Study of Political Theory and Comparative Politics

von Beyme, K.

2014, XIII, 165 p. 11 illus., 6 illus. in color., Softcover

ISBN: 978-3-319-01534-7