

Contents

1	Introduction	1
1.1	General Relativity and GR Tests	2
1.1.1	Black Holes	3
1.1.2	Black Hole Binaries: Sources for GW Emission	5
1.2	Pulsars and Pulsar Timing	6
1.2.1	Pulsar Timing	6
1.2.2	GR Tests with Pulsar Timing	8
1.3	Current GW Experiments, and PTAs	9
1.3.1	GW Detectors	9
1.3.2	Pulsar Timing Arrays	11
1.4	Bayesian PTA Data Analysis	14
1.4.1	Modelling the PTA Data	15
1.4.2	Markov Chain Monte Carlo	16
1.5	Thesis Summary	17
	References	19
2	On Measuring the Gravitational-Wave Background Using Pulsar Timing Arrays	23
2.1	Introduction	23
2.2	The Theory of GW-Generated Timing Residuals	25
2.2.1	Timing Residual Correlation	25
2.3	Bayesian Approach	28
2.3.1	Basic Ideas	28
2.3.2	Removal of Quadratic Spindown and Other Systematic Signals of Known Functional Form	29
2.3.3	Low-Frequency Cut-Off	31
2.4	Numerical Integration Techniques	33
2.4.1	Metropolis Monte Carlo	33
2.4.2	Current MCMC Computational Cost	34
2.4.3	Choosing a Suitable Prior Distribution	34
2.4.4	Generating Mock Data	35
2.5	Tests and Parameter Studies	36
2.5.1	Single Dataset Tests	36
2.5.2	Multiple Datasets, Same Input Parameters	38

2.5.3	Parameter Studies	40
2.5.4	Comparison to Other Work	41
2.6	Conclusion	45
	References	47
3	Gravitational-Wave Memory and Pulsar Timing Arrays	49
3.1	Introduction	49
3.2	The Signal	50
3.3	Single-Source Detection by PTAs	51
3.3.1	Other Parameters	54
3.4	Detectability of Memory Jumps.	55
3.4.1	Sensitivity to the Arrival Time	57
3.4.2	Source Position.	58
3.5	Tests Using Mock Data	58
3.5.1	Used Models	60
3.5.2	Upper-Limits and Detecting the Signal	61
3.6	Discussion	63
3.6.1	Comparison with Other Work.	65
	References	66
4	Placing Limits on the Stochastic Gravitational-Wave Background Using European Pulsar Timing Array Data	67
4.1	Introduction	67
4.2	EPTA Data Analysis	69
4.3	EPTA Observations	70
4.3.1	Overview of the Observatories	70
4.3.2	Selection of Data Sets	71
4.4	Overview of Data Analysis Methods	73
4.4.1	Detecting the GWB.	73
4.4.2	Placing Limits	74
4.4.3	The Timing Model and Timing Noise	75
4.5	Bayesian PTA Data Analysis	76
4.5.1	Brief Review of the Bayesian Inference Method.	76
4.5.2	Obtaining a Marginalised Posterior Distribution	77
4.5.3	Used Model for the TOAs	78
4.5.4	Combining Datasets	81
4.6	Results	81
4.6.1	Selecting the Most Cconstraining Datasets	82
4.6.2	GWB Upper Limit	84
4.7	Implications and Outlook	86
4.7.1	Supermassive Black Hole Binaries	87
4.7.2	Cosmic Strings	88
4.7.3	Comparison with Other PTA Projects, and Prospects.	89

4.8	Conclusion and Discussion	90
	References	97
5	Marginal Likelihood Calculation with MCMC Methods	99
5.1	Introduction	99
5.2	Bayesian Inference	100
5.3	Markov Chain Monte Carlo	101
5.3.1	The Harmonic Mean Estimator	102
5.3.2	The Truncated Harmonic Mean Estimator	103
5.3.3	Analogy with Tessellations	103
5.3.4	A Practical Algorithm	106
5.3.5	Error Estimates	107
5.4	Comparison to Other Methods	108
5.4.1	Metropolis Hastings	108
5.4.2	Nested Sampling	109
5.4.3	Parallel Tempering	109
5.5	Applications and Tests	111
5.5.1	Toy Model 1: A High-Dimensional Gaussian	111
5.5.2	Toy Model 2: Egg-Box Function	113
5.5.3	Application in Pulsar Timing	114
5.5.4	Assessing Bias	116
5.6	Discussion and Conclusions	119
	References	120
6	Summary for Non-experts	121
6.1	Gravity and Gravitational Waves	122
6.1.1	The Theory of Relativity	122
6.1.2	Testing the Theory of Relativity	123
6.1.3	Gravitational Waves	124
6.1.4	Black Holes	125
6.2	Pulsars and Pulsar Timing	126
6.2.1	Pulsars	126
6.2.2	Pulsar Timing	127
6.2.3	Pulsar Timing Arrays	129
6.3	This Thesis	130
6.3.1	Testing the Method	131
6.3.2	Gravitational-Wave Memory	131
6.3.3	Analysis of European PTA Data	132
6.3.4	Calculating the Marginal Likelihood	132
6.4	Future Work	133
	Curriculum Vitae	135
	Index	137

Gravitational Wave Detection and Data Analysis for Pulsar Timing Arrays

van Haasteren, R.

2014, XI, 139 p. 40 illus. in color., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-3-642-39598-7