

Contents

|                                                                                                                              |            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 1 Consumption and Well-Being, An Introduction . . . . .                                                               | 1   |
| Miriam Tatzel                                                                                                                |            |
| Part I Money and Consumption for Well-Being                                                                           |            |
| 2 Money for Happiness: The Hedonic Benefits of Thrift . . . . .                                                       | 13  |
| Joseph Chancellor and Sonja Lyubomirsky                                                                                      |            |
| 3 Getting the Most for the Money: The Hedonic Return onExperiential and Material Purchases . . . . .             | 49  |
| Travis J. Carter and Thomas Gilovich                                                                                         |            |
| 4 Loneliness, Material Possession Love, and Consumers’Physical-Well-Being . . . . .                              | 63  |
| John L. Lastovicka and Laurel Anderson                                                                                       |            |
| Part II Individual and Cultural Variations                                                                            |            |
| 5 Value Seekers, Big Spenders, Non-Spenders,and Experiencers: Consumption, Personality, and Well-Being . . . . . | 75  |
| Miriam Tatzel                                                                                                                |            |
| 6 Money, Materialism, and the Good Life: Cultural Perspectives . . . . .                                              | 109 |
| Christie Napa Scollon and Derrick Wirtz                                                                                      |            |
| Part III Consumption and Sustainable Well-Being                                                                       |            |
| 7 Happy Planet, Happy Economy, Happy Consumers? . . . . .                                                             | 129 |
| Charles Seaford                                                                                                              |            |
| 8 Measuring What Matters . . . . .                                                                                    | 153 |
| Eric Zencey                                                                                                                  |            |

9 Epilogue-Confessions of a Closet Materialist: Lessons Learned about Money, Possessions, and Happiness . . . . . 175
Miriam Tatzel

Index. . . . . 195

Consumption and Well-Being in the Material World

Tatzel, M. (Ed.)

2014, VIII, 198 p. 18 illus., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-94-007-7367-7