1. Introduction	1
1.1. Motivation	1
1.2. Research questions and contribution	2
1.3. Scope and limitations	4
1.4. Organization of the research	5
2. Transmission channels of monetary policy	7
2.1. The money view	7
2.2. The credit view	10
2.2.1. The balance sheet channel	11
2.2.2. The bank lending channel – Overview	13
3. The bank lending channel in detail	18
3.1. Structure and elements of the bank lending channel	18
3.1.1. Condition 1: The central bank must be able to affect the supply scheme of bank loans	22
3.1.1.1. Subcondition 1: No complete adjustment to adverse monetary policy shocks by the sale of securities/liquid assets	23
3.1.1.2. Subcondition 2: No access to non-deposit forms of funding without additional cost	24
3.1.1.3. Subcondition 3: Banks must not be capital constrained	26
3.1.2. Condition 2: Publicly issued debt and non-bank intermediated loans must not be perfect substitutes for bank loans	28
3.1.3. Condition 3: Prices must not adjust instantaneously	32
3.2. Conclusion	34

4. A new view: Implications of financial innovation for bank lending	35
4.1. The bank lending channel revisited	35
4.2. Toward a conceptualization of the new view	40
5. Bank lending against the background of the recent crises	44
5.1. The loss spiral	45
5.2. The margin spiral or leverage cycle	50
5.3. Conclusion	52
6. Review of empirical evidence on bank lending and its implications	55
6.1. Remarks on the difference between the US and the euro area	56
6.2. Empirical evidence from the US	58
6.2.1. US evidence based on aggregate data	58
6.2.2. US evidence based on data from individual banks	59
6.2.3. Conclusion	67
6.3. Evidence from the euro area	68
6.3.1. Euro area evidence from before the crisis	69
6.3.2. Euro area evidence in the wake of the crisis	73
6.3.3. Conclusion	76
6.4. Implications of theoretical framework for interpretation of empirical evidence	77
7. Empirical analysis – approach	82
7.1. Research hypotheses	82
7.1.1. General hypotheses	83
7.1.2. Hypotheses involving the context of the recent crisis	85
7.2. Overall empirical strategy and approach	89
7.3. Empirical model	91
7.3.1. Derivation of a model of bank behavior	91
7.3.2. Introduction of the empirical model	96
7.4. Data	98
7.4.1. Data sources	98
7.4.2. Target capital estimation	110

7.4.3. Special challenges	113
7.4.3.1. Disentangling loan supply and loan demand	113
7.4.3.2. Determining the relevant crisis period	115
7.4.4. Purging the data.....	119
7.5. Estimation method.....	121
8. Empirical analysis – results	129
8.1. Results for the euro area.....	129
8.1.1. Descriptive statistics and correlations	131
8.1.2. Baseline analysis	134
8.1.2.1. Results of the standard specification.....	134
8.1.2.2. Robustness checks	139
8.1.2.3. Summary of main results and relationship to existing literature....	150
8.1.3. Capital surplus	153
8.1.3.1. Results of the standard specification.....	153
8.1.3.2. Robustness checks	156
8.1.3.3. Summary of main results and relationship to existing literature....	160
8.1.4. Deposit overhang.....	161
8.1.4.1. Results of the standard specification.....	163
8.1.4.2. Robustness checks	165
8.1.4.3. Summary of main results and relationship to existing literature....	169
8.2. Results for major euro area countries	170
8.2.1. Composition of the country samples and tested specifications.....	171
8.2.2. Main results for Germany.....	174
8.2.3. Main results for Italy.....	178
8.2.4. Main results for France	181
8.2.5. Main results for Spain	184
8.2.6. Discussion of inter-country differences and differences between countries and the euro area	187
8.3. Conclusion – Main research hypotheses confirmed	191

9. Final discussion and implications	194
9.1. Overall summary of results.....	194
9.2. Theoretical contributions	197
9.2.1. Contributions to research regarding the determinants of bank lending	197
9.2.2. Contributions to bank lending channel-related research	199
9.2.2.1. General contributions	199
9.2.2.2. Monetary policy indicator	200
9.2.2.3. Disentanglement of loan supply and loan demand	201
9.3. Implications for bank management.....	202
9.4. Implications for monetary policymakers	205
9.5. Implications for the discussion of banking supervision	206
9.6. Limitations and outlook.....	207
