

Contents

1	Introduction: Nondemocracies in a Changing Era	1
1.1	The Habitual Way of Thinking About Nondemocracies and What Is Puzzling Today	2
1.2	The Changing Milieu of World Politics	5
1.2.1	The Intangible Aspects of Nondemocratic Incentive: Reputation	6
1.2.2	Managing Openness: A New Challenge	8
1.3	External Openness and Internal Openness in Contemporary China	9
1.4	Disaster Management: Why Study It, and How?	13
1.4.1	What Type of Disasters?	15
1.4.2	Studying Disaster Management from the Perspective of Top-Down Coordination	16
	References	17
2	Evolution of Disaster Management Practices in China: A Trend Toward Greater Openness	21
2.1	The Evolution of China's Disaster Management Policy and Institutional Apparatus	23
2.1.1	Insisting on Self-reliance: A Closed-door Disaster Management Policy	24
2.1.2	Seeking Legitimate International Recognition: The Start of Opening-up in Disaster Management	27
2.1.3	Integrating into the International Community: Increased Cooperation and Transparency in Disaster Management	31

2.2	New Visions, Accustomed Practices, Embedded Interests: Making Opening-up an Ongoing Trend	35
2.2.1	Top Decision Makers: A New Vision of Linking Disaster Management to Public Diplomacy	36
2.2.2	Enforcement Agencies: Organizational Embedding in and Dependency on Global Networks	40
2.2.3	Local-Level Implementers: Welcoming the Entry of Foreign Actors	43
2.3	Conclusion	44
	References	45
3	Agency Problems in Disaster Response: The “Adaptation Quandary” for Nondemocratic Government	49
3.1	New Tasks, Old Approaches	52
3.2	Case Study: The 2008 Wenchuan Earthquake	54
3.2.1	Janus-Faced Practices, Symbolic Management Approach, and Disregard of Rules	57
3.2.2	Agent Shirking Due to Difficulties in Policy Implementation	60
3.2.3	Crippled Monitoring Mechanisms and Biased Learning	63
3.3	Conclusion	65
	References	66
4	Postdisaster Changes in Local Governance and Chances for Nonstate Sector Development	71
4.1	Innovations in Local Governance in the Aftermath of the Wenchuan Earthquake	73
4.1.1	A Supply-side Story	76
4.1.2	Government Agents’ Changed Mentality	77
4.1.3	Fervor in “Branded Projects (Pinpai Xiangmu)”	77
4.2	Local Cadres’ Mixed Attitudes Toward Nonstate Actors	78
4.2.1	Development of the Nonstate Sector in China After the Wenchuan Earthquake	78
4.2.2	Nonstate Actors Were Welcome	80
4.2.3	Local Cadres’ Wariness and Hostility Toward Nonstate Actors	83
4.3	Conclusion	86
	References	88
5	A Note on Generalizability, Variation, and Implications	91
5.1	Generalizability	94
5.2	Variation	98
5.3	Implications	102
5.4	Epilogue	103
	References	106

Contents	xvii
Appendix A: Notes on Fieldwork and Data Collection	107
Appendix B: Interviewee List	121
Bibliography	125

Disaster Management in China in a Changing Era

Kang, Y.

2015, XVII, 126 p. 13 illus., 8 illus. in color., Softcover

ISBN: 978-3-662-44515-0