

Contents

1	Scintillation and Inorganic Scintillators	1
1.1	The Phenomenon of Scintillation	1
1.1.1	What Is a Scintillator?	1
1.2	Survey of Scintillation Mechanisms	7
1.3	Scintillation Radiating Centers	13
1.4	Classification of Inorganic Scintillation Materials	19
1.5	The Story of the Scintillation Materials	30
	References	32
2	How User's Requirements Influence the Development of Scintillators	43
2.1	User's Requirements for High Energy Physics	46
2.1.1	Introduction	46
2.1.2	Physics Requirements for High Energy Physics Experiments	47
2.1.3	Scintillator Requirements for High Energy Physics Experiments	50
2.1.4	Cost Considerations	52
2.1.5	Crystal Calorimeters in the World	53
2.2	Spectrometry of Low Energy γ -Quanta. Non-linearity of Scintillator Response	53
2.3	User's Requirements for Medical Imaging	58
2.3.1	Introduction and Historical Background	58
2.3.2	The Different Medical Imaging Modalities	59
2.4	Radiation Detection for Security Applications	73
2.4.1	Passive Detection	73
2.4.2	Active Detection Systems	75
2.4.3	Neutron Activation Analysis for Security Systems	77

2.5	Physics of the Universe, Astrophysics, Nuclear Planetology	78
2.5.1	Dark Matter and Double Beta Decay Study	78
2.5.2	Planetary Nuclear Spectroscopy	83
2.5.3	Astrophysics	84
2.6	Well and Mud Logging	90
	References	93
3	Addressing the Increased Demand for Fast Timing	103
3.1	Introduction	103
3.2	Pile-Up Problem in HEP at Future High Luminosity Colliders	104
3.3	Timing in Medical Imaging	104
3.4	Theoretical Considerations on Time Resolution with Scintillator-Based Detectors	106
3.5	Nonlinear Optical Phenomena to Detect Ionizing Radiation	109
3.5.1	Introduction	109
3.5.2	Observation of the Effect in PbWO ₄ Crystal	110
3.6	Generation of Prompt Photons	113
3.6.1	Cross-Luminescence (or Core-Valence Transitions)	115
3.6.2	High Donor Band Systems	115
3.6.3	Intraband Fast Radiating-Absorbing Processes in Scintillators	116
3.6.4	Quantum Confinement	119
	References	121
4	Scintillation Mechanisms in Inorganic Scintillators	125
4.1	Introduction	125
4.2	Relaxation of Electronic Excitations	126
4.3	Initial Stages of Scintillation Process. Track Formation and Exited States Thermalization	130
4.4	Limiting Factors at Each Step of Energy Relaxation	135
4.4.1	Creation of Electronic Excitations	135
4.4.2	Transfer to Luminescence Centers	137
4.4.3	Emission of Luminescent Centers	142
4.5	Creation and Quenching of Radiating Centers	143
4.6	Thermal Quenching	151
4.6.1	Non-radiative Relaxation to the Ground State	151
4.6.2	Thermo-stimulated Photo-ionization and Trapping Effects	155
4.7	Charge Exchange Processes. Photo-ionization and Charge Transfer	157
4.7.1	Charge Transfer	157
4.7.2	Photo-ionization	161
4.7.3	Impurity-Trapped Exciton	163
4.8	Quantitative Description of the Scintillation Process	165
	References	168

5	Energy Resolution and Non-proportionality of Scintillators	175
5.1	Scintillator Energy Resolution	175
5.1.1	Factors Influencing the Energy Resolution of Scintillation Detectors	175
5.1.2	The Influence of Light Collection on the Energy Resolution	177
5.1.3	Contribution of the Photo-Detector Quantum Efficiency	178
5.2	Non-proportionality of the Scintillator Response	179
5.2.1	Introduction	179
5.2.2	Fundamental and Track Structure Contributions to Non-proportionality	180
5.2.3	Influence of the Electronic Excitation Clustering on the Energy Yield and Resolution	182
5.2.4	General Classification of Scintillator Yield Non-proportionality	188
5.2.5	Light Yield Losses and Reserves to Improve Scintillators	191
	References	193
6	Influence of Crystal Structure Defects on Scintillation Properties	197
6.1	Scintillation Media	198
6.2	Defects in a Crystal	200
6.3	Change of the Optical and Luminescence Properties by Crystal Defects	206
6.3.1	Scintillation Light Absorption by Crystal Defects	206
6.3.2	Harmful Luminescence and Afterglow	209
6.3.3	Low Background Problem	211
6.4	Radiation Damage of Scintillators and Radiation Hardness Improvement	211
6.4.1	Radiation Created Defects in Dielectrics	213
6.4.2	Interconnection of Colour and Light Emitting Centers in Scintillator	215
6.4.3	Radiation Stimulated Losses of Scintillator Transparency	216
6.4.4	Radiation-Stimulated Losses of Scintillation Efficiency	224
6.4.5	Approaches to Radiation Hardness Improvement	229
6.5	Recovery of Radiation-Induced Absorption	236
6.6	Stimulated Recovery of Radiation-Induced Absorption	243
	References	247

7	Charged Hadron Radiation Damage of Scintillators	253
7.1	Creation of Defects in Scintillators Under Hadrons Exposure	255
7.2	Comparison of Color Centers in PbWO_4 and $\text{Lu}_2\text{SiO}_5\text{:Ce}$ After γ -Rays and High Energy Proton Irradiation	256
7.3	General Properties of Damage in Crystalline Materials Under Hadron Exposure	262
7.4	Phosphorescence	267
7.5	Radio-Luminescence Induced by Radioisotopes in Heavy and Light Scintillation Crystalline Materials	269
7.6	Material Selection to Reduce the Calorimeter Activation Under Hadron Irradiation	277
	References	278
8	Crystal Engineering	281
8.1	Phase Diagrams	282
8.1.1	Phase Diagram of Continuous Solid Solutions	282
8.1.2	Eutectic and Distectic Phase Diagrams Without Solid Solutions	283
8.1.3	Eutectic Phase Diagram with Areas of Solid Solutions	284
8.1.4	Impurity Solubility During the Growth	285
8.1.5	Scintillation Crystal Phase Diagrams	286
8.2	Single Crystal Growth	289
8.2.1	General Considerations on the Crystallization Process	289
8.2.2	Basic Methods for Scintillation Crystal Growth	290
8.2.3	Bridgeman and Stockbarger Methods	291
8.2.4	Czochralski and Kyropolos Growth Techniques	294
8.2.5	Micro-pulling-Down Crystal Growth Method	296
8.2.6	Modern Trends in Scintillation Crystal Manufacturing	300
8.2.7	State-of-the-Art for Crystal Growth	312
8.3	Activator Distribution in a Single Crystal	313
8.4	Raw Material Preparation for Scintillator Crystal Growth	316
8.4.1	Raw Material Purity	316
8.4.2	Raw Material Treatment and Preparation for the Crystal Growth	317
8.4.3	Special Atmosphere for the Crystal Growth	318
8.4.4	Halide Scintillators Hygroscopicity	318
8.4.5	Surface Deterioration	320
8.4.6	Additional Melt Purification	320
8.4.7	Non Stoichiometry	321

8.5	Thin Scintillation Film Deposition	321
8.5.1	Halide Thick Films for X-Ray Radiography	321
8.5.2	Thin Films for Micro-imaging Applications	323
8.5.3	Thin Single Crystals for Micro-imaging Applications	324
8.6	Light Collection	327
8.6.1	Simulations	328
8.6.2	Detector Shaping	330
8.6.3	Optical Guide	333
8.6.4	Light Shifters	333
8.6.5	New Trends in Light Collection: Photonic Crystals	335
	References	337
9	Examples of Recent Crystal Development	345
9.1	Example of Lead Tungstate Crystal Development for High Energy Physics Experiments	345
9.1.1	Introduction	345
9.1.2	The Conditions of Scintillator Development for High Energy Physics (HEP)	347
9.1.3	Strategy for the CMS Calorimeter	349
9.1.4	Role of PWO Electromagnetic Calorimeter (ECAL) in the Discovery of the Higgs Boson by the CMS Collaboration at LHC	352
9.1.5	PWO-II Scintillation Crystals for PANDA Calorimetry	357
9.1.6	Newly Discovered Luminescence Properties of PWO Crystals	358
9.2	Cation and Anion Mixed Scintillation Crystals	362
9.2.1	Introduction and General Models	362
9.2.2	Mixed Halide Scintillators Production and General Models	363
9.2.3	Mixed Oxide Crystals	366
9.2.4	Light Yield Improvement for Different Crystal Structures	371
9.2.5	Scintillator Modification and “Forbidden Zone Engineering”	373
9.2.6	Defects Engineering	374
9.2.7	General Remarks	375
9.3	Ceramic Scintillation Materials	377
9.3.1	Introduction	377
9.3.2	Production of Complex and High-Temperature Compositions	378
9.3.3	Complex Garnet Ceramics	378

9.4	Glass-Ceramic Scintillation Materials	379
9.4.1	Introduction	379
9.4.2	Lithium Silicate Glass Ceramics	380
9.4.3	Barium Silicate Glass Ceramics	384
9.5	New Generation of Halide Scintillators	387
9.5.1	The History of Halide Scintillators Search	387
9.5.2	New Rare-Earth Halide Scintillators	388
9.5.3	Elpasolite Structure Crystals for Neutron Detection	390
9.5.4	Specificity of New Halide Scintillators	390
	References	393
	Appendix: Conclusion	401
	Index	403

Inorganic Scintillators for Detector Systems

Physical Principles and Crystal Engineering

Lecoq, P.; Gektin, A.; Korzhik, M.

2017, XVI, 408 p. 226 illus., 44 illus. in color., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-3-319-45521-1