

Contents

1	Introduction	1
1.1	General	1
1.2	Sources	5
	References	6
2	Radio Astronomy in the Netherlands: An Astronomers' Matter	7
2.1	The History of Dutch Astronomy and Leiden's Growing Dominance	7
2.2	The 'Founding Fathers' Karl Jansky and Grote Reber	10
2.3	The Distribution of Astronomical Literature During the War	14
2.4	Radar and the First Radio Astronomy Groups	16
2.5	Dutch Radio Astronomy: Astronomers Take the Lead	22
2.6	War Turmoil and the Discovery of the 21-Cm Hydrogen Line	25
2.7	Looking for Partners	31
2.8	Seeking Financial Support: The Determination of Oort	35
2.9	The 'Würzburg-Riese' in Kootwijk	38
2.10	Science and the Reconstruction of the Country	41
	2.10.1 Pure Science and Its Applications: How to Fool Your Funders	46
2.11	Being Both Judge and Jury	49
2.12	Galactic Versus Solar Research	50
2.13	Big Science Versus Little Science	53
2.14	Radio Astronomers Versus Optical Astronomers	55
	References	56
3	The Making of the Dwingeloo Radio Telescope	61
3.1	A National Foundation for Radio Astronomy	61
3.2	Maximal Efficiency and the Exclusion of Groningen	62
3.3	Troubles with Engineer Hoo	65
3.4	The 'Dicke Switch'	68
3.5	Rising Costs and Delays	71
3.6	In Search of a Location	75

3.7	Science and Society	83
3.8	A Spiral Structure.	89
3.9	Competition Versus Cooperation	96
3.10	The Invisible Engineer	99
3.11	Beyond American Hegemony.	106
	References	113
4	Joining Forces with the Belgians	117
4.1	A Continuity with the Past	117
4.2	The Belgians and Their Continuing Astrophysical Tradition.	121
4.3	'Project Large Cross Antenna'	126
4.4	The Long and Difficult Road to an Agreement with the OEEC.	129
4.5	The OEEC as a Divisive Issue	136
4.6	The Impossible Marriage Between Belgian and Dutch Science Policies	141
4.7	Choosing Between ESO and BCAP: A False Dilemma.	149
4.8	Belgium's Conditions: Internationalisation and Industrial Benefits	152
4.9	The Inextricable Link to the Antarctic Expeditions	158
	References	165
5	The Westerbork Synthesis Radio Telescope	169
5.1	The First Design	169
5.1.1	The Australians and the Cross	176
5.2	The Second Design.	180
5.3	The Third Design	186
5.3.1	Earth-Rotation Aperture Synthesis.	189
5.4	The Fourth and Final Design	197
5.5	Where to Build the Telescope?.	199
5.6	A Frustrating Construction Process	205
5.7	Tightening Budgets	207
5.7.1	The Late Payments of the Belgians	209
5.7.2	Government Austerity and Stricter Application Procedures	214
5.8	Source Counts and Cosmology	219
	References	225
6	Conclusion	229
	Reference.	236
	Index.	237

The Rise of Radio Astronomy in the Netherlands

The People and the Politics

Elbers, A.

2017, XIV, 240 p. 40 illus., 8 illus. in color., Hardcover

ISBN: 978-3-319-49078-6