

PREFACE AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Oscar Wilde and the Cultures of Childhood is largely based on the papers delivered at a one-day conference sponsored by the Center for Seventeenth- and Eighteenth-Century Studies, University of California, Los Angeles, on 29 May 2015. The Center coordinates all of the public programs held in association with the William Andrews Clark Memorial Library (UCLA), which houses the largest collection of Wilde-related materials in the world. My thanks go to Prof. Barbara Fuchs, who directed both the Center and the Clark Library from 2011 to 2016, for her support toward the conference. The Center staff members, especially Erich Bollmann, Jeanette LaVere, Myrna Ortiz, Kathy Sanchez, Candis Snoddy, and Alastair Thorne, provided much appreciated administrative and technical assistance that ensured the success of this event. My gratitude goes to Helen Deutsch, current Director of the Center, for providing generous support for the various permissions fees. At the Clark Library, Scott Jacobs, together with David Eng, provided high-resolution reproductions of several of the figures included both inside and on the cover of the present volume. Rebecca Fenning Marschall, Philip Palmer, and Nina Schneider made many items in the Clark's collections available to me during the Library's temporary closure. Jennifer Camilleri at the Royal Academy of Arts, London, assisted with the arrangements for reproducing Fig. 3.1. D.C. Rose and Naomi Wood answered a question about the accessibility of materials held in the online site, The Oscholars, for the years 2006–2012.

Several copyright holders have kindly granted permission for the inclusion of materials reproduced in Oscar Wilde and the Cultures of Childhood. The cover image and Figs. 1.1, 1.2, and 5.2 are reproduced by permission of the William Andrews Clark Memorial Library, University of California, Los Angeles. George Eastman House granted permission for the reproduction of Figs. 2.1–2.3. The Royal Academy of Arts, London, granted permission for the reproduction of Fig. 3.1. Figures 2.4–2.6 are reproduced with permission from the collection of Merlin Holland. Figures 4.1–4.9 are taken from the collection of Lorraine Janzen Kooistra. Figure 5.1 comes from Amanda Hollander’s personal collection.

I am especially grateful to Merlin Holland for permitting extensive quotations from Oscar Wilde’s correspondence, which remains under US copyright through 2038. Merlin Holland has also kindly allowed the reproduction of quotations from Vyvyan Holland’s two memoirs, Son of Oscar Wilde (1954) and Time Remembered after Père Lachaise (1966). The Society of Authors (UK) granted permission for the inclusion of a quotation from Compton Mackenzie’s Sinister Street (1914). My thanks go to Sarah Baxter, at the Society, for her guidance. The British Library granted permission for brief quotations from unpublished writings by Thomas Martin (Add. MS 81758) and Robert Harborough Sherard (British Library Add. MS 81688). The National Archives of the UK kindly permitted the reproduction of short extracts from the documents held in the file relating to Wilde’s prison sentence (HO 144/271/A58947). I appreciate the advice that David Sutton (University of Reading) gave me on the names and addresses of several copyright holders.

Some of the materials contained in Chapter 1 were presented in a paper, “Oscar Wilde, the Fairy Tale, and the Illustrated Book, 1888–1928,” which I delivered at “Celebrating the Mark Samuels Lasner Collection: Rare Books and Manuscripts, Victorian Literature and Art,” held at the Morris Library, University of Delaware, 17–18 March 2017. I am grateful to the University of Delaware for hosting this event.

At Palgrave Macmillan, Benjamin Doyle and Camille Davies offered extensive advice on the preparation of the manuscript. The contributors wish to thank the anonymous external reader for such a constructive and thorough evaluation of our research; the detailed report proved invaluable during the final phases of preparing our chapters for the press.

Finally, I wish to express my gratitude to all of the participants in this volume for their responsiveness in meeting deadlines, chasing up permissions, and providing the necessary materials to bring this project to a close. Margaret D. Stetz, who has always shared her expert knowledge of fin-de-siècle writing with such openhandedness, deserves a particular note of thanks for discussing with me important aspects of Wilde's fairy tales, especially "The Selfish Giant."
