

Preface and Acknowledgements

The present study attempts to apply a fresh approach to the study of literary London and extends prior work on the ideas of psychogeography and the literary city. It was accepted as a doctoral dissertation at the University of Gießen, Germany in 2016.

I wish to thank my first supervisor, Ingo Berensmeyer (JLU Gießen) for his continuous support and encouragement. His constructive comments have challenged and enriched my ideas over the process of writing this thesis. I also express my warmest gratitude to my co-supervisor Clare Brant (King's College London) whose suggestions and extraordinary insights into eighteenth-century London life and literature were invaluable. Without Ingo's and Clare's guidance, persistent help and, above all, their warm-heartedness, this study would not have been possible. Thank you both ever so much!

I also owe thanks to the International PhD Programme Literary and Cultural Studies (IPP). The IPP has enabled me to present and discuss my work at various international conferences and has funded two extended research stays in London during which I walked in the footsteps of eighteenth-century London walkers and was able to dig up literary London journeys from the archives of the British Library. It was also during these stays that I fell irrevocably in love with London.

I am indebted to my family and friends whose moral support did a long way to helping me through the ups and downs of the dissertation journey. My warmest gratitude goes to my husband Patrick and to Carolin and Constantin who have made available their support in a number of indescribable ways. Thanks also to my friends and colleagues Jule, Andrea and Martin for reading parts of my manuscript and for always being there for me.

Finally, my heartfelt appreciation goes to my parents Carla and Christoph for their unconditional and lifelong support. It is to them that this book is dedicated.
