Preface	XI
1 Self-Representation	1
1.1 Introduction.....	1
1.2 Egocentric spatial representation as self-representation I: a relationist view.....	6
1.2.1 Egocentric representation: A relationist view.....	9
1.2.1.1 Egocentric representation: initial considerations.....	10
1.2.1.2 Relational content.....	12
1.2.2 A challenge: monadic spatial contents	15
1.2.2.1 Simplicity.....	15
1.2.2.2 Ecological and developmental plausibility	16
1.2.2.3 Phenomenology.....	19
1.2.2.4 Constitution vs. content.....	27
1.2.3 ‘Self-representation’ introduced	30
1.2.4 Summary of Ch. 1.2 and outlook on Ch. 1.3	36
1.3 Egocentric spatial representation as self-representation II: Argument from design	38
1.3.1 The argument from design.....	40
1.3.1.1 1 st Step: Peculiar design	40
1.3.1.2 2 nd Step: “Concern”	42
1.3.1.3 3 rd Step: Peculiar functional role.....	54
1.3.2 Critique of the argument from design.....	57
1.3.3 Interim conclusion and outlook	59
2 Action	61
2.1 Action as a constitutive condition on spatial representation: Introduction.....	62

2.1.1	Action as a constitutive condition on spatial perception: Brief historical overview	63
2.1.2	The notion of ‘constitutive condition’	68
2.1.2.1	The various notions of ‘constitution’	68
2.1.2.2	McDowell: Constitutive conditions and enabling conditions	71
2.1.2.3	Burge: Constitution and essence.....	73
2.1.3	Summing up.....	76
2.2	Systematic overview of constitutive accounts I: Hurley, Noë, Embodiment approaches.....	77
2.2.1	Introduction.....	77
2.2.2	Susan Hurley’s Two-level interdependence view	80
2.2.2.1	Instrumental dependence and constitutive dependence	81
2.2.2.2	Applying the notion of instrumental dependence to the accounts of Husserl and Gibson.....	86
2.2.3	Alva Noë’s enactive approach	91
2.2.4	Embodiment approaches: Shaun Gallagher and Maurice Merleau-Ponty.....	98
2.2.4.1	Embodied action I – Shaun Gallagher	99
2.2.4.2	Embodied action II – Maurice Merleau-Ponty	110
2.2.4.3	Summing up embodiment approaches.....	118
2.3	Systematic overview of constitutive accounts II: Kinaesthesia , potentiality and disposition to act	120
2.3.1	Late Edmund Husserl.....	121
2.3.2	Max Scheler.....	123
2.3.3	Gareth Evans.....	128
2.3.4	Summary of capability accounts.....	134
2.3.5	Summary of systematic overview.....	135

3	Empirical Evidence.....	139
3.1	Empirical evidence for action as a constitutive condition on spatial perception.....	140
3.1.1	Overview of empirical evidence in favour of constitutive views.....	141
3.1.2	Effects of action on distance and slant perception – The Proffitt studies.....	145
3.1.2.1	Empirical objections to Proffitt studies	150
3.1.2.2	What kind of dependence?	153
3.1.2.3	The significance of the results of Proffitt studies.....	157
3.1.3	Inverted vision.....	158
3.1.3.1	A challenge to the sensorimotor view	160
3.1.3.2	Inverted vision studies as evidence for capability approaches	161
3.1.3.3	An alternative proposal	165
3.1.3.4	Summary	167
3.1.4	Sensory substitution devices	168
3.1.4.1	Spatial perception or judgment?	170
3.1.4.2	Which account best accommodates the results?.....	184
3.1.4.3	Summary	191
3.2	Empirical Challenge: The dual visual systems hypothesis	191
3.2.1	The challenge that 2V poses	192
3.2.2	Considering the evidence for 2V	195
3.2.2.1	Optic Ataxia	196
3.2.2.2	Experimental dissociation studies	198
3.2.3	United, not divided.....	201
3.2.4	Summary of Part 3 on empirical evidence.....	203

Appendix to Part 3: Philosophical implications of the dual visual systems approach to vision.....	207
Introduction.....	207
A brief introduction to 2V	208
2V and action as a condition on perception.....	209
Arguments in favour of action control by conscious experience	213
Conclusion	214
4 Egocentric Space as Self-Representation	217
4.1 Egocentric spatial representation as self-representation III: Argument from action as a constitutive condition on egocentric representation.....	217
4.1.1 An argument for the Schelerian approach	218
4.1.1.1 Sense of one's own capabilities	221
4.1.1.2 Relevant capabilities are basic movements	233
4.1.1.3 Arguments in favour of the view.....	241
4.1.2 Summary of the account.....	244
4.1.3 Egocentric spatial representation as self-representation.....	245
4.2 Conclusion	247
