

Preface

My interest in the subject of international labor mobility to and from Taiwan dates back to my tenure in the Computer Division at Sharp Corporation in the 1990s, where I worked in several joint projects with Taiwanese ICT companies for the advancement of personal computers. These companies comprised returnees from the US, who were well equipped with the acquired knowledge of advanced technologies, and spoke English fluently. Contrastingly, in the factory attached to the office, many foreign laborers constituted the unskilled labor in the manufacturing line. These two opposing aspects of international labor mobility in the Taiwanese industries particularly impressed me, and could be considered the starting point of some of my most significant research.

This book is a product of my long exploration of international labor mobility to and from Taiwan since the starting point.

I am deeply indebted to my supervisors in both my master's and doctoral degrees, Prof. Hitoshi Hirakawa and Prof. Osamu Ishida, respectively. Without their guidance, my research would not have been possible. Prof. Hirakawa shared his expert knowledge on Asian economics and international labor mobility, and provided valuable guidance for my research. Prof. Ishida encouraged me to widen my scope to analyze Taiwanese economies within the wider range of international economies, and helped develop and convert my interest into a doctoral thesis.

I would like to express gratitude to my professors in both my master's and doctoral degrees, Prof. Kazushi Shimizu, Prof. Hiroshi Fukagawa, Prof. Akinori Isogai, Prof. Kunio Hisano, Prof. Hitoshi Osaka, Prof. Kenji Iwata, Prof. Ryuzo Kuroki, Prof. Masataka Kimura, Prof. Etsuko Katsu, and Prof. Rei Seiyama for their valuable support. I am also sincerely grateful to my college mates while pursuing the master's and doctoral degrees, Mr. Ronald Yeung and Prof. Michihiro Hino, respectively, for sharing their knowledge on various subjects during our graduate school days.

After I got a tenure post at the Kyushu Sangyo University, I gained significant knowledge from various joint research projects with many professors. I am grateful to Prof. Keiji Natsume, Prof. Etsuro Ishigami, Prof. Ryoji Nakagawa, Prof. Naoki Hayashi, Prof. Song Nang Ok, Prof. Takashi Habuchi, Prof. Takashi Hosokawa,

Prof. Atsushi Saito, Dr. Yujiang Lu, and Prof. Tomohisa Ueda for allowing me to join the research project on the returnees in Asia from developed countries. I would also like to thank Prof. Hiroshi Oikawa, Dr. Momoko Kawakami, Prof. Nana Oishi, Prof. Dah-June Lin, Prof. Teruo Asamoto, Prof. Hiromu Onose, Prof. Jun Akabane, Prof. Nobuhiro Takahashi, Prof. Norio Tokumaru, and Prof. Ching-Jui Liu for sharing knowledge or conducting various meaningful research projects with me. Further, I would like to thank Kyushu Sangyo University for providing me with a supportive environment, both financially and practically.

I am also sincerely thankful to my supervisor at Sharp Corporation, Mr. Yasumasa Imose, for providing me with several opportunities pertaining to international projects with companies from emerging economies, especially Taiwan.

In addition, I appreciate the support of my Taiwanese friends, Mr. Carl Tsai and Mr. Vincent Wang.

I am particularly grateful to Prof. Hiroshi Oikawa, Prof. Norio Tokumaru, Prof. Ching-Jui Liu, and other anonymous reviewers for their valuable comments and suggestions on this book.

Lastly, I am eternally grateful to my family for their continuous support and patience.
